NATIONS AGAINST MEXICO

South America Supports United States in Its Attitude Toward Huerta.

TO EVEN UP OLD SCORES

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25.—Several nations of South America have seized the opportunity to even up old scores with President Huerta by joining with the United States in its present attitude towards Mexico. The present situation is said to be the first time on record in which Latin America has turned against one of its chief members and espoused the United States in a controversy concerning it in a vital way.

Huerta has given offence to several of the larger nations of South America by a diplomatic aggressiveness he assumed shortly after he deposed President Madero.

When President Wilson delivers his address on the Mexican question to Congress tomorrow, he will be spokesman not only for the United States, but for practically the entire civilized world. Through his frank interchange of views with the European and Latin-American governments in the presentation of his proposals to them the President has won support in unexpected quarters.

There still is a last chance that the message will not be delivered, and Washington today is watching the telegraph wires to Mexico City. If President Huerta sends word that he has reconsidered his rejection of the American proposals and wishes to renew negotiations with Envoy Lind, there is a possibility that the message will not go to Congress. However, President Wilson's program will not be changed unless Huerta's note amounts to at least a part acceptance of the American proposals.

It is charged Coppola married Elsie Wagner in Fitchburg December 16, 1911, while he still had a lawful wife living in Haverhill. Francis Sealese, a justice of the peace in Haverhill, testified he married Coppola to Mary Louise Bergeson under the name of James Colleppi on April 22, 1910.

Coppola told the jury that he thought the laws of this country permitted "trial marriages," allowing a man to live with a woman six months before marrying her.

Fined for Assault in Franklin Park

Roxbury Judge Denounces Rowdyism at Places of Recreation.

John Rimbrick, twenty, of No. 852 Washington street, Dorchester, was fined $15 by Judge Perrins in Roxbury today for assaulting Samuel Silverman during rowdyism in Franklin Park, Sunday. Silverman lives at No. 36 Rose street. Patrolman Purcell, who arrested Rimbrick, was hit on the head with a brick.

Judge Perrins said:

"This is another of these disgraceful cases of rowdyism which are becoming all too common. People in the parks have a right to expect to be let alone."

Three other men were fined $5 each for playing cards in the park. They were John White of No. 46 Washington street, Cambridge; John Usuman of No. 34 Norris street, Cambridge, and Joseph Machiak of No. 46 Washington street, Cambridge.

Agnew of No. 160 Windsor street, Cambridge, backed into the grocery store window of William H. Murphy in Ferris street, Malden.

DECLARES FOSS WILL RUN AGAIN

Senator Dennis E. Halley of Lawrence, following a conference with Governor Foss, at the State House, today, announced that Governor Foss decided to run that he is to be an independent candidate for a fourth term as Governor. Senator Halley said:

"Governor Foss said to Representative John C. Sanborn and me: 'Watch the boys, I'm going to be your Governor for another year.'"

Senator Halley explained that Governor Foss' declaration was in answer to a question if he would be a candidate. He said the Governor answered:

"Yes, boys, I've decided to be an independent candidate for another term. That is absolute. I'm going into the fight and I'm going to win.

"The condition of the Republican party and the dissatisfaction in Massachusetts with the National Democratic tariff policy and the betrayal of the people by the Democratic legislators in the railroad question will bring about my election.

"The voters want an independent and they know that I am a true independent. I have never deceived the people. Perhaps the politicians have been deceived, but I have been true to the voters from the very beginning.

"I have always been strong with the independent voters of the State and the independent vote this year will be larger than ever.

"I like a hard fight and this is going to be one.

"I get whatever I go after."

Governor Foss declined to comment on the Halley statement. The Governor has until October 6 to file nomination papers as an independent candidate for Governor.

Mrs. Astor Loses $10,000 Diamonds

Brooch Missed During Haggin Ball Given in a Tent.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 25.—It has just been learned that Mrs. John Astor lost a $10,000 diamond brooch at the big ball given in a tent last week by Mrs. James B. Haggin at the Arleigh Villa. When the loss was discovered everybody was cautioned to say nothing about it. Then a hunt party was organized to search every inch of the tent floor as well as the short grass around the tent. For this purpose all sorts of lights, lamps, lanterns, Japanese lanterns, oil lamps and candles were brought into requisition.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 25.—The United States Embassy today despatched Lewis Heck, acting vice consul, to Asiatic Turkey to open an inquiry into the killing of the Rev. C. H. Holbrook of Lynn, Mass., a missionary. He was shot while asleep in the garden of an Armenian, whose attentions to Turkish women were resented. In the darkness Dr. Holbrook was mistaken for the offender and killed.

Chaloner Invites Thaw to Visit Him

"Any Sane Man Is Safe in Virginia," He Declares.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Aug. 25.—John Armstrong Chaloner has written a letter to Harry K. Thaw congratulating him on his escape from Matteawan and inviting him to come to Virginia when he gets out of Canada.

"Thaw would be perfectly safe in this State," said Chaloner. "Any sane man is safe in Virginia, and Thaw is sane. He should have come here, instead of Canada, in the first place. If he had he would not be in the fix he is in now."

Hoseman Carries Gasoline from Fire

A plumber's torch in the basement shop at No. 20 Salem street set fire to the wall early today, and the flames drove out three families living in the upper stories. Some fled by way of the fire escapes. The damage was about $500. Hoseman Humphries carried a five-gallon can of gasoline out of the burning basement.

Show Kneelet, High Twin to Anklet

ATLANTIC CITY, Aug. 25.—The kneelet today made its appearance upon the boardwalk, circling the limbs of two young women who acknowledged they came from Pittsburgh. The kneelet is worn with the slit skirt and is the twin to the anklet, with the exception that it was worn just above the knee. Also the slit in the skirt extends to show the kneelet.

PROSECUTOR STARTS RIGID PROBE OF USE OF MONEY IN PLOT

SHERBROOKE, P. Q., Aug. 25.—A bribery plot to free Harry Thaw is in existence, according to the indirect admission of D. H. Reynolds, Canadian immigration officer, today.

REFUSES TO GIVE DETAILS.

Reynolds would give no details. But he allowed it to be understood that some immigration officers had been given a peep at Thaw money, with a hint that it would be easy to let Harry slip away from them as soon as he crossed the border on the way to Norton's Mills, Vt., after his deportation is ordered next Wednesday.

The repeated rumors of bribery and of plots for Thaw's freedom have somewhat alienated the sympathies of the townspeople from the prisoner.

James Nichol, crown prosecutor, started an investigation today of the reported bribe plot to free Thaw. He took secret steps to get at the truth of the matter and to learn whether any of the officials had been approached.

Fears Kidnapers.

Thaw today dictated a remarkable interview to a representative of the AMERICAN.

He insisted that he be allowed to give the interview in his own way—directed the reporter to simply take down what he said—and then proceeded to question and cross-question himself, answering his own questions, and maintaining the greatest gravity throughout the performance.

His "interview" is the most peculiar document in the Thaw case thus far.

Thaw began by saying that he is afraid the New York authorities are planning to kidnap him. He says he has told his attorneys to hire extra guards for himself. Thaw added a strong attack upon Dr. Austin Flint, and declared the alienist "knows no more about insanity than I do about electricity."

Regarding his fear of kidnaping, he said:

"It has come to my ears that the New York authorities will try to kidnap me if I am released on habeas corpus proceedings, as I fully expect to be," said Thaw. "I understand they will try to seize me by force and carry me into New York State. Whether the

Deny Progressives Plan Party Break

Denial was made at the headquarters of the Progressives today of the report in a morning newspaper that a revolt is threatened by the rank and file of the party against the party rules, on the ground that too much power is lodged in the hands of the party leaders. Frank Goodie, one of the secretaries of the State Committee, said:

"The present rules were made when the party was not a legal political party. Now it is one, and the State Committee will meet Thursday to change the by-laws, so that all of them will conform to the State political laws."

High Government Officials Gambling

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25.—Evidence has been found that betting on horse races, according to the police, has not been confined to clerks in the government departments, but that certain high officials also were patrons of the bookmakers, six of whom recently were arrested in the Navy Yard.

attempt will be made in Sherbrooke or whether the kidnaping will wait until we are on United States soil is a question, but they would hardly affront the immigration authorities by seizing me if I am in the hands of Dominion government representatives."

Thaw's Interview.

Then Thaw consented to give out an interview, and this is the way he began:

"If I am to give this interview, I must give it along my own lines. Just take down what I dictate."

Here is the interview:

"Your reporter had an uninterrupted conversation with Harry this morning. His first question was as to whether Harry ever pretended to be insane.

"Harry replied: 'Well, the other day we spoke of that time in Jerome's office when it was for some reason declared by the district attorney to prevent any jury trial. I made no pretence, and never made any pretence later.'

"Lie," the Word That Suits It.

"Q.—Didn't your lawyers pretend you were insane?

"A.—My lawyers went into the first trial and said I was perfectly sane and only put on alienists to present the exact facts of the case to the jury. The alienists were asked a hypothetical question, which they answered that at the time of the act I suffered from a defective reason, because of which I did not know the nature of the act nor that it was wrong.

"Q.—Then whenever any newspaper has said that you pretended to be insane to deceive the jury it was a lie? A.—That is probably the only word that suits it. The jury was told perfectly out and out that I was sane, because while they were sifting an honest conclusion gave me an insanity trial—the only regular insanity trial I ever had—and they all admitted I was sane. Every alienist swore I was sane and the lawyers got up and swore to it also.

"Trying to Fool Its Readers."

Q.—Then the jury knew you were perfectly sane from the honest statements of alienists and all your counsel? A.—That is fairly square. Every paper knows it, even though they state to the contrary in order to deceive their readers.

Q.—That is pretty plain language. A.—I would like to ask you or anyone who reads your papers why any newspaper in the country should say that I or any of my counsel tried to pretend I was insane when everyone knows we all told the jury and commission I was perfectly sane while the court was sitting, unless the paper that does it is deliberately and intentionally trying to fool its readers?

Q.—Do you suppose they tried to fool their readers to try and fool some disreputable persons of influence with the papers?

Thaw evidently meant to say: "To please some disreputable persons of influence with the papers."

Harry said very slowly: "Any person who reads the AMERICAN editorials of June, 1906, written at the very time, can form a fair presumption as to why certain papers that would cringe to persons of wealth might be deliberately trying to deceive their readers to please some sort of vicious wealth."

Q.—Didn't that first jury vote for conviction?

"A.—Yes. Member No. 2, who was a brother of Mr. White's secretary in the Madison Square Garden Company, and whom my feeble collection of counsel—aside from Mr. Delmas—had been unable to identify, voted murder in the first degree, but he told the other jurymen he would vote for manslaughter in the second degree if all would agree to even the mildest conviction. And five voted manslaughter, and they agreed to make it in the second degree.

17 Out of 24 for Acquittal."

Q.—And the second jury voted to acquit you? A.—Yes, 17 out of 24 were for absolute acquittal (juries of two trials) and nothing else.

Q.—There are some papers that seem to have forgotten that? A.—So they claim.

Q.—How long would you have been in prison if you had been convicted of manslaughter in the second degree. A.—In prison if you had been convicted of murder in the first degree and everybody knows how long he stayed.

Here Thaw ceased speaking, but, picking up a book himself, wrote as follows:

"Harry remarked that genuine psychiatrists had said that Flint as an alienist was merely assuming. He has made a few visits to madhouses, though he never lived in one and he knows no more about insanity than a person like I was in 1906, who never saw one. Then he really has a gift of gab and is not worried by scruples. It may be that he considers it too old fashioned for a modern pseudo-scientist to believe in any scruples.

"It is possible that Flint is one of those curiosities born without a moral sense, but I am inclined to think that he once had one, from certain atrophied remains, the same as one finds certain fossilized specimens in a siturian sand storm, but put it aside as inconvenient.

"Must Have Been Taken In."

"You know his specialty is not the care of patients but public testifying, a sort of a ready rescue of robins. I am told it is a fact that several reporters believe, or did believe, that Flint was an alienist.

"They surely must have been taken in by the old gentleman. We were told by Charlie Morschauser, 'The elder brother of the judge, that after Flint had wheezed out his testimony on paranoia that he sat by Mr. M. and admitted, 'Of course he has not got paranoia, but he really may have something.'

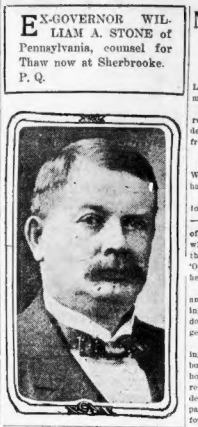
"Dr. Flint in his testimony began well and said that Harry's eyes were shifting. Then he forgot himself and looked down at me. I was gazing upon him gently, without a twinkle.

"The fact that my eyes were not shifting, in itself did not bother him at all, but he craftily turned to the judge, hoping perhaps that His Honor was reading one of the newspapers on his desk. The judge was not reading newspapers just then, which was a bad thing for Dr. Flint, as it crippled his testimony.

"He knew Judge Keogh as a good man, so with remarkable facility he changed his answer to 'No, I might be in error. Perhaps they don't shift.'

"After half a dozen more questions his position was gone. It was a serious loss, for while no one in the court room paid any attention to Flint and McDonald then, their opinion had really made some impression in 1907 and had been much appreciated by the editors of a few newspapers which are indicated in the AMERICAN'S editorial of 1906, as 'Those which ordinarily cringe before vicious wealth.'

"Harry's opinion of Dr. Flint: "Dr. Flint is about as competent an alienist as I am electrician. I know little more about electrical engineering than a man who knows nothing. It would take me three years to become proficient. Dr. Flint knows a little more psychiatry than a man who knows nothing, but he has never had any practice. Sheen brought this out pretty clearly in his cross-examination of Dr. Flint."



E-GOVERNOR WILLIAM A. STONE of Pennsylvania, counsel for Thaw now at Sherbrooke. P. Q.

MAY PUT THAW IN DEATH CELL TO PREVENT ESCAPE

SHERBROOKE, P. Q., Aug. 25.—Jailer LaForce today, alarmed at repeated rumors of an attempt to rescue Thaw, said:

"If I get any substantiation of this rumor I shall clap Thaw into the murderers' cell here. No one ever escaped from there."

Thaw took this threat calmly.

Thaw is to be deported into Vermont Wednesday or Thursday, the authorities have decided.

Roger O'Mara is collecting witnesses to help Thaw. Ex-Governor William A. Stone of Pennsylvania is preparing to take charge of Thaw's fight for liberty in Vermont. He said:

"Thaw's talking too much. He'll talk himself back into Matteawan."

Thaw himself is planning a publicity campaign in Vermont and New Hampshire, and is also trying to tell his lawyers what to do. He has cashed another draft, this time for $2,000.

Thaw has refused a $1,000 a week vaudeville offer. Unlimited funds have been placed at his disposal by his family.

Mulhall Defends His 'Code of Morals'

Admits Getting Salary of $100 a Week from Newspaper.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25.—Testimony in behalf of Representative McDermott of Illinois was heard by the House lobby committee today, when Arthur West of Barton, O., testified that he was secretary to McDermott from December, 1907, to August, 1909, and that during this period he had never seen Colonel M. M. Mulhall, agent of the National Manufacturers' Association.

When Colonel Mulhall took the stand James Easby-Smith, attorney for McDermott, asked, "Have you any code of morals at all?"

"More than you have," shouted Mulhall, "and I would like to tell you more of them on the outside."

Mulhall testified that he was drawing a salary of $100 a week from a New York newspaper which first published his charges, and that he had received up to date about $5,000 for his work.

Urge Amendment to Currency Bill

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25.—The discount provision of the Glass currency reform bill, with the troublesome question of to what the federal reserve banks should go to rediscounting paper based on agricultural products as security, came before the Democratic caucus of the House today. Representatives and the insurgents in the caucus put forward an amendment designed to permit farmers to hold their crops six months while money is advanced to them by the banks. Final action on this amendment was not looked for today, as nearly every Democrat in the House representing a rural region was anxious to talk on the subject.

Lawson Awards Motor Vehicles

The following telegram was received today from Thomas W. Lawson, donor of the three motor vehicles at the Marshfield Fair:

"I award the Hulmobile touring car to number 97, the Ford runabout to number 3,060, and the Indian motorcycle to number 10,078.

"THOMAS W. LAWSON."

The awards will thus go to the following persons:

First, touring car, to E. L. Joslin, No. 370 Washington street, Dorchester.

Second, runabout, to Peter S. Strang, West Duxbury.

Third, motorcycle, to Margaret Winslow, South Duxbury.

B. & M. Decreases Service to Resorts

Beginning today, the Boston & Maine Railroad will gradually decrease its train service to Summer resorts. Several trains were discontinued today, and others will be taken off August 30, 31, September 1, 2, 8, 7, 8, 9, 13, 14 and 26. A complete list of the proposed changes has been printed by the company.

THAW SURE TO GO BACK TO NEW YORK, SAYS JEROME

COLEBROOK, N. H., Aug. 25.—Former District Attorney William Travers Jerome of New York arrived here today on his way to Beecher's Fall, Vt., whence he will probably go to Sherbrooke and then return to Norton's Mills to prepare to receive Harry Thaw when the prisoner is deported.

Jerome is confident Thaw will be sent back to New York. He said:

I have no doubt that Thaw will be returned to New York and again confined in Matteawan. I am confident of the outcome of this case. I believe Thaw will be deported from Canada and there will be no trouble about getting him into New York State.

Jerome was travelling by automobile. He has always been thoroughly in touch with the Thaw case, and was born instrumental in keeping Thaw in Matteawan—like a Nemesis on the slayer's track.

He will have no standing in the Canadian courts, but will work through Samuel Jacobs, a leading Montreal lawyer, who has been retained.

Jerome's return to Norton's Mills will bring him into touch with District Attorney Conger of Dutchess county, New York, and John Mack, Conger's predecessor in office. The three men will then make arrangements to checkmate any move to kidnap Thaw upon his release in Norton's Mills.

Mack and Conger are already there, watching all strangers in town and preparing to ensure Thaw's incarceration without trouble.

THAW COUNSEL TO MAKE FIGHT FOR NEW HABEAS CORPUS

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 25.—When Harry K. Thaw is released on habeas corpus Wednesday, as it expected by the department of justice here, the Canadian government will institute deportation proceedings. The justice department here expects that Thaw's lawyers will immediately apply for another writ of habeas corpus, and at the hearing to raise the question of the applicability of the Canadian immigration act to Thaw, holding that he does not come within any of the prohibited classes.

This will become a question for the courts, and may be carried to the judicial committee of the privy council in London.

An official of the justice department said today that it was possible that Thaw might be allowed to select the port for leaving Canada by giving surety that he would leave by the port so selected by him.

R. A. Pringle, K. C., of Ottawa, has been retained by the State of New York to represent it here before the Justice Department.

The Love Story of Harry Thaw and Evelyn Nesbit

As Dramatic in Its Weaving As Any Fiction—And What of the End?

"Alas, the love of women! It is known
To be a lovely and a fearful thing."

The adjective "fearful," which the poet Byron saw fit, in his inspired perception, to pen into the above lines, applies with terrific force in this, the thirteenth year of the acquaintance of Harry Kendall Thaw and Evelyn Nesbit Thaw.

The personality of Harry Thaw is inevitably associated forevermore in the minds of the public with that of his wife.

When the news flashed over a startled world a week ago that Thaw had escaped from Matteawan Asylum for the Insane—with all the sensational staging that has characterized the life of that wayward man—the public looked for Evelyn Nesbit Thaw's name to be brought immediately into the narrative and to be kept there.

In this the public has not been disappointed. From her New York stage the wife gave forth a statement, harsh and, unfriendly, prophesying her husband would soon talk himself into capture—which was true—and asserting that she feared lest he attack her.

Why He Fled Matteawan.

When the reporters who converged at Thaw's jail cell in Sherbrooke obtained first speech with the prisoner, their opening question was:

"Why did you flee from Matteawan?"

His answer was two-fold and half of it harked back to the old motive which has wrought such havoc with his life—love for his wife.

Thaw said, in part:

"I might have stood it in Matteawan if I had not heard that Evelyn Nesbit Thaw had returned to the stage. I lost all that was dear to me in the world. I lost the love of a woman for whom I would have done anything in the world."

True, Thaw did not say that he fled Matteawan to seek his wife and her love.

But he brought his love for her to the surface of his reasoning as naturally, to him, as if he were an ordinary man who had loved in the ordinary domestic way, instead of with an affection so fantastic and so tragic in its effects that Byron's word "Fearful" seems but a fight description.

"Loves Me Like Yellow Dog."

To Thaw's declaration of a love that had burned brightly, his wife returned another jeering denial, a bitterly worded and contemptuous refutation that Harry Thaw could ever have loved her or any other woman.

"Loves me—like a yellow dog," was her scathing characterization of her husband's plane of affection.

These assertions and counter-assertions between the strangely mated pair, however much they shatter the least suggestion of a reconciliation, compel the public mind to dwell again on the one-time love of Harry K. Thaw and Evelyn Nesbit.

It is a multi-colored design, this pattern of love woven in and out of the two lives.

It is a gilded love—golden with the Thaw wealth which blasted the life of the man and never uplifted the life of the girl.

It is a gray love—gray with the shadow of the insane asylum, which offered Thaw wretched alternative for the electric chair.

Was it ever a white love—white with semblance of purity, with any unselfishness, any sweet sincerity or redeeming features?

Become "Public Institutions."

Persons like Harry Thaw and Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, who are so be-written and be-pictured, who have figured as principals in the murder, sudden death and capital trials, become more like public institutions than flesh and blood people.

The name "Harry Thaw" is mentioned.

The world gets a mental impression of a shooting, of famous—or infamous trials—of alienists and "Brainstorms"—of legal juggling—of outpoured wealth—of an asylum and of repeated efforts to win a legal way out.

One does not think of Harry Thaw as a man, like the neighbor across the way, or the chap one chats with on the 7:30 train to town, or the clerk who sold one a pair of shoes.

He is HARRY THAW—a monstrosity, more than a living, breathing human being, subject to stomach ache, maybe to heart-ache.

"Evelyn Nesbit," says somebody.

First off, one thinks of rows and rows of endless newspaper pictures, all the Evelyn poses and "snapshots" that energetic editors could corrall.

One thinks of the girl-wife who told in a public court the most horrible tale of her own ruin—as she alleged—that ever woman spake from the witness stand.

Her latest phase is that of the recreated dancer, the stage person, the "turkey-trotjer."

There is the eternal glamor, to be sure, of motherhood. But that very title, which should be an halo, bears a flaw if what Thaw himself says be true.

And so the name of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw is almost institutional a one as that of Harry Thaw. Ordinarily love is not associated with the name, but rather a kaleidoscope of whirling emotion.

The Story of Their Love.

But did not this man and maid ever love like common folks?

Who knows the story of their first meetings? Who recalls the original Evelyn Nesbit, she of the sweetly winsome face and the flower-like beauty?

What was the tale—mad tale if need be—of their affection and their marriage?

In the midst of the legal snarl which has knotted itself together in an unsuspecting Canadian community and which has caused the name of Harry Thaw to be fairly screamed all around the civilized world—in the midst of all this clamor—let the mind turn back to the love story of Harry Kendall Thaw and Evelyn Nesbit.

EVELYN AND CHILD MENACED BY BLIGHT OF HARRY THAW

Evelyn, returning to the long forsworn footlights' illuminated life, with promise of success, sees the shadow of a man, tall, loose jointed, with self-indulgent face and sullen, smouldering eyes, across her path, a shadow that, unless its substance be confined at Matteawan, menaces, she asserts, her life and that of her child.—From Ada Patterson's Description of the Blight of the Thaw Tragedy.

SEVEN-YEAR TRAIL OF MISFORTUNE LEFT BY THAW'S TRAGEDY

By ADA PATTERSON.

No one is superstitious in these enlightened days, but strange things befall and happen in curiously consecutive series. One life throws a long shadow over lives. An event seems to cast its shadow over many individuals for many years. The shadow of the Thaw trial is seven years long, and seems rather to deepen than lessen.

The recent death of Mrs. Bertha Smith in Paris pointed the finger of memory to the long trail of sorrow and disaster that has lain behind the Thaw trial. Mrs. Smith died of a broken heart. The doctors, deeply learned as they were, and fond of the baffling, five-syllabled vocabulary of medical science, could give to the cause of her death no other name. She had grieved herself to death because her husband, J. Clinch Smith, had gone down to death in the deep North Atlantic waters with hundreds of other victims in the collision of the Titanic with an iceberg.

Saw Architect Slain.

But the death of J. Clinch Smith was not such as this. Brother of Mrs. Stanford White and acquaintance of Harry Thaw, he had been at the scene of the architect's murder, and testified at the trial for the slaying of his brother-in-law. Thus he who testified that Harry Thaw gazed him whose boy "was much married," and offered in case he were not the society of "a buxom brunette of his own intimate acquaintance."

While Mr. Smith did not accept the generous offer, and the evidence did not prove that it was his habit to accept other such offers, there followed closely upon his testimony alienation from his wife. Strained relations but shortly preceded a separation that had continued for years.

Lost with the Titanic.

The husband was returning from a visit to his wife to open their home in America to receive her and there to begin a new honeymoon where disaster overtook the supposedly unsinkable vessel. Grieving at this tragedy, refusing to be comforted because of the years empty of all save sorrow that had preceded the husband's death, the wife has followed him into the inscrutable shadows.

The sudden death of Juror Bolton's devoted wife, who, while carrying clothing to her closely guarded husband, contracted a cold which developed into pneumonia and died within a week of the opening of the great trial. The trial was temporarily closed to permit the juror to bid farewell to his faithful grayhaired partner at the graveside. Thus the death of a woman was the first in the long chain of misfortunes as the last that has followed those connected more or less closely with the Thaw case.

Dr. Wiley, a family physician of the Thaws, summoned from Pittsburgh to give testimony in the prisoner's favor, besides suffering severely at the hands of the counsel for the people in the examination, was soon afterward struck by lightning at his home in Pittsburgh, receiving injuries from which he will never recover.

The subsequent events dealt yet more harshly with the Thaw lawyers than the physicians. John Gleason has been in almost constant litigation with the Thaws and still mourns his missing fees. Clifford Hartridge endured not only loss of fees, the harassment of continued litigation and consequent bankruptcy, but tragedy hailed at his door, halted and entered. His beautiful wife, an observed and observant figure at the trial, mysteriously disappeared from her home. When at last she was found there remained of her but the outward husk of her former self. She died in a sanitarium at Pittsburgh.

Disgrace, disbarment and imprisonment successively overtook Daniel O'Reilly, the rubicund-faced, broad-shouldered man, who, though silent during the deliberations in court, was one of the most active of the quartet on whom devolved the task of saving the rich, erratic client from death in the electric chair.

D. M. Delmas came from California, heralded as an orator, golden-voiced and invincible. Yet his long looked for plea for Thaw's life was disappointing, because, perforce, the arguments were chiefly Thaw's, and for this reason made ludicrous by the prisoner's self glorification.

One silent figure at the Thaw trial, one so modest, so beautiful and so genuinely sorrowful that it enlisted instant respect and pity, denied to some of the other daily attendant figures, was the prisoner's sister, Alice, Countess of Yarmouth. While the brown-eyed girl sat day after day in the chair immediately behind her brother, in the field air amid the motley crowd in the court room, she nourished twin sorrows in her bosom. One was a grief known by all the world, that for the prisoner at the bar.

The other, yet more poignant, was the gnawing torment of disillusionment. Even then the Countess of Yarmouth was feeling the necessity of the annulment of a marriage with the Earl of Yarmouth, who, however sordid and shallow he had shown himself to her family, had been to her airish mind a hero, to her heart of a girl, her lover. The brief record of the annulment of the marriage was nevertheless written in her tears.

Evelyn Thaw, alienated from the prisoner and his family, beginning to nibble at the dangerous sweets of her former life, hazarded a dinner with E. R. Thomas at the Hotel Knickerbocker. Manager Regan requested them to leave the house to spare it notoriety. Upon this minor humiliation followed the Kentucky sportsman millionaire's insolvency, his divorce from the beautiful former Nadia Lee and an automobile accident which rendered him a cripple possibly for life.

In Breach of Promise Suit.

Mrs. Susie Merrill, from appearing briefly above the turbid waters of the underworld to recite Thaw's alleged unfaithfulness to the heroine of the renowned trials and the alleged cause of the murder of Stanford White, figured afterward in a breach of promise suit against a banker, in which she cut a most inglorious figure, retiring in anger and defeat from the public's amused contemptuous scrutiny.

The evil fortunes of those associated with the Thaws did not cease with Thaw's immurement at Matteawan. J. W. Anhut was convicted of attempting to bribe the superintendent of the Institution and the superintendent resigned his position.

Evelyn, returning to the long forsworn footlights illuminated life, with promise of success, sees the shadow of a man, tall, loose jointed, with self-indulgent face and sullen, smouldering eyes across her path, a shadow that, unless its substance be confined at Matteawan, menaces, she asserts, her life and that of her child. Unless she conquers her fear of the shadow she may retire to obscurity and with her babe hide under an assumed name until her beauty fades and the security of old age is followed by death's greater security.

Wherefore, there is a strong disinclination to become a factor in the further unfolding of Harry Thaw's affairs. Already Sheriff Kelley, despite his well-earned reward, says he wishes he had never seen him.

ONE of the women whom fate cast into the shadow of the Thaw tragedy. Mrs. Bertha Smith, widow of Stanford White's brother-in-law, who died broken-hearted in Paris.

CAMINETTI IS READY TO FIGHT 'SLAVE' CHARGE

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 25.—Declaring that he intended to put up a vigorous defence when placed on trial in the United States District Court Tuesday morning, F. Drew Caminetti, companion in their flight to Reno with Maury Diggs, Marsha Warrington and Lola Norris, exclaims the reasons why he refused to plead guilty.

"These reports that I intended to plead guilty were occasioned by the anxiety of my mother following the conviction of Diggs," said Caminetti. "She was of the impression that I would stand no show whatever on trial and that it would possibly be better for me to plead guilty and throw myself on the mercy of the court.

"Both my counsel and myself have indeed been to look differently upon the matter since. In the first place I could not think of pleading guilty to the charges placed against me and admit that I was a white slaver."

Caminetti said he would try to shift the blame for the elopement on the shoulders of Lola Norris.

PLAN TO MAKE FILIPINOS FREE; FORBES QUITS

The fact that Francis Burton Harrison, recently appointed by President Wilson as Governor-General of the Philippines, will go to the Islands to carry out the program of preparing the Philippines for independence at the earliest possible day, was announced at Washington today, coincident with news from Manila that W. Cameron Forbes of Boston had resigned as Governor-General.

Mr. Forbes' resignation, Manila dispatches say, is effective September 1, and he will leave for home directly thereafter.

It was only yesterday, Mr. Forbes says, that he was apprised of the appointment of Harrison. His friends feel strongly that he deserved more courteous treatment after so long a service.

The ruling Governor-General publishes in Manila papers a reply to attacks by Representative Jones of Virginia, who, in pressing the passage of a Philippine bill giving "independence" to the Philippines, urged the removal of Governor-General Forbes.

He declares that the Virginian representative cannot persuade Americans, who lead the world in industrial enterprises, that they are incompetent to manage a governmental enterprise and that he cannot advance his case by "unpatriotic and unwarranted assault upon the good names of the country's representatives."

Car Men Throng to the Resumed Open Hearing.

Nichols for the road, told of the increase in the cost of living during the last few years. The room was crowded with car men, and there were several besides the counsel, Vice-Presidents Brush and Sargent of the Elevated.

Fly Half-Mast Flag for Lost Doryman

Schooner Fallon, in from Fishing Grounds, Reports Tragedy.

With colors at half mast for the loss of one Nelson of Liverpool, N. S., the fishing schooner John J. Fallon, Captain Jerry Shea, arrived at T Wharf today and discharged a cargo of groundfish. Friends of Thomas Delorey, another member of the crew of the Fallon, heard a thrilling tale of his rescue and the brave efforts to save Nelson.

The two men had made a good haul of fish. A big sea overturned the craft, throwing the men into the sea. Another sea following closely behind the first washed the men close to the overturned dory again, and they grasped the rope at the bow. Delorey and Nelson mere flinging were encouraging each other to hold fast, although the icy cold water was making both numb. When the schooner neared the men, and a dory was launched to rescue them, the grip of death overcame Nelson, and he released his hold on the rope.

'THAW AN APPALLING EGOIST,' SAYS FORMER COUNSEL LITTLETON

LONDON, Aug. 25.—Martin W. Littleton, who was chief counsel for Harry K. Thaw at his second trial for the slaying of Stanford White, said in an interview here today:

"Thaw is of abnormal type. He just missed being a strong man and, missing it, Heaven knows what he is.

"He reasons accurately enough when he begins to reason, but no one can tell where he is going to begin, whether at the right or the wrong point. His conclusions are usually logical, his premises anything but glorious. The trouble with him is he can't stop thinking. He suffers from a strain of ideas, the preponderate value of which he has incapable of judging."

Mr. Littleton went on to discuss Thaw's "brainstorm," saying that, though he does not like the term, it is precisely what Thaw's disorder is.

"During his trial," continued Mr. Littleton, "he was obsessed with the idea that the reading of Bernard Shaw's works was having a bad influence on his wife. He worried about it more than about anything else concerned with the case, except the amount of attention the newspapers gave him. His egotism is something appalling, but it has also virtue of saving him from melancholy, giving him the comfortable assurance that whatever he does is right.

"He has a morbid dread of ever being ignored. He would rather be pursued by all the prisons and asylums authorities in America than be overlooked. The keenest disappointment which he suffered during his trial was when the newspapers ceased for one morning to give a whole report of the case.

"It was not personal revenge or the 'unwritten law' or anything of that sort that made him kill White, but the conviction that there was no other way in which he could champion the cause of injured women.

"People seem to have the impression that he is a drunken degenerate. Thaw is absolutely not so.

"Personally, I do not think that the question of his sanity will ever be dispassionately settled in the State of New York. I believe it would be an excellent thing if Thaw and the State government could agree on an inquiry into his condition.

"If I were asked on oath whether I could decide his case, I would say nothing short of the provocations he endured before the killing of Stanford White would make him a danger to any one."

REVERE WOMAN SAYS HUSBAND ATTACKED HER

Mrs. William Port of Revere was found today in her home in a critical condition from loss of blood, the result, she said, of her husband's hacking her with a knife. Her recovery from wounds in the breast, side, left shoulder and right leg, is considered a matter of doubt by the physicians.

The Ports' Winter home is in Chelsea, but this Summer they are in Revere. When Mrs. Port made a sharp reply to her husband's remarks, she says he pulled a long knife and attacked her repeatedly. She fell to the floor unconscious.

Port walked across the street, and called Dr. R. W. Brown on the telephone. "Mrs. William Port is seriously ill," he said. "Come at once."

Dr. Brown ordered Mrs. Port to the hospital.

The Greater Boston police are searching for Port, who is described as thirty-eight years old, five feet eight inches tall, medium build, and having light curly hair.

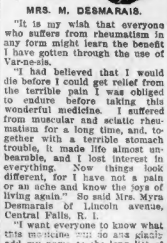
FOUND HEALTH IN NEW REMEDY

Feels Grateful to Var-ne-sia for Recovery After Many Years

Var-ne-sia seems to be a tonic of general conversation, and many are daily giving their experience with this new remedy. Mr. Varney and his physician continue to meet the public every day at the Riker-Jaynes drug store, corner Washington and Hanover streets.



MRS. M. DESMARAIS.

"It is my wish that everyone who suffers from rheumatism in any form might learn the benefit I have gotten through the use of Var-ne-sia.

"I had believed that I would die before I could get relief from the terrible pain I was obliged to endure before taking this wonderful medicine. I suffered from muscular and sciatic rheumatism for a long time, and, together with a terrible stomach trouble, it made life almost unbearable, and I lost interest in everything. Now things look different, for I have not a pain or an ache and know the joys of living again." So said Mrs. Myra Desmarais of Lincoln avenue, Central Falls, R. I.

"I want everyone to know what this medicine will do and gladly add my name to the long list of Var-ne-sia supporters."

Now is the time to get Var-ne-sia. Start today; get rid of that rheumatism, that stomach trouble, and enjoy the feeling of good, red blood running through your system.

If you cannot call, write to W. A. Varney, Lynn, Mass., for the booklet. Advice is free at the Riker-Jaynes drug store, corner Hanover, where Mr. Varney and the doctor are meeting the public. All reliable druggists out of town sell Var-ne-sia.

In the Men's Department at Houghton & Dutton Co. are being shown some very fine All-Wool Knit Ties. These are worth $1.00 and $1.25, but they are being sold at 79c. Street floor.

BOSTON CAUSE OF BIG OCEAN LINE RATE WAR

Boston is to be the unwitting cause, according to present indications, of a tremendous rate war among trans-Atlantic steamship lines, a war that will disrupt the shipping pool, which has practically controlled trans-Atlantic traffic.

The Hamburg-American line came to Boston. Now the North German Lloyd line has announced the commencement of a Boston service in competition with the Hamburg-American. The Hamburg-American retaliates by planning a service between Hamburg and Baltimore, attacking the Lloyd Lines' exclusive traffic there.

A rate war is to follow. The cuts in rates by these two lines, it is announced, will force a reduction by the Cunard, White Star and other big companies.

Senate Corrects Tariff Bill Errors

Wool Paragraph Approved, Despite Fight to Be Made Later.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25.—In the Senate today the Underwood-Simmons bill was read for minor errors and to correct obscurities of language, the paragraphs on which there is a distinct division of opinion being laid over temporarily.

The following paragraph in the free list was approved of by the Senate, despite the fact that a fight will be made later on the wool schedule:

"Wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, angora goat, alpaca and other like animals not specially provided for in this section, and all wools and hair on the skins of such animals and twine for binding any of the foregoing."

"This paragraph shall be effective on and after the first of December, 1913."

Aided by Girl in Attempt to Escape

Katherine Riordan of No. 407 Main street, Charlestown, was found guilty in Chelsea court today of aiding a prisoner to escape. The case was filed. The Riordan girl and Annie Kearns were living at No. 649 Beach street, Revere. Patrolman Webb of Charlestown went to arrest the Kearns girl as stubborn. The Kearns girl was found a minute later on the sidewalk outside with two broken wrists and cuts about the head. The Riordan girl said Annie Kearns had jumped to escape arrest. Miss Kearns testified today that Miss Riordan pushed her out of the window.

Plumbers to Pick Officers Today

The United Association of Plumbers, Gas Fitters, Steam Fitters and Steam Fitters' Helpers of America held the seventh and last day of their convention today at Ford Hall. It was voted: That the name of the association shall hereafter be "The United Association of Plumbers and Gas Fitters of America." This shortens the former name by five words. The election of officers is scheduled today.

6,000 MOTHERS AND CHILDREN AT NANTASKET

Today was the AMERICAN'S "Mothers' and Children's Day" at Nantasket. Fourteen hundred women and children took the first steamer, the Nantasket, for the shore today.

Seventeen hundred more went on the steamer Rose Standish an hour later. The AMERICAN had arranged for four boats to carry the women and the babies to the shore. The South Shore at half past ten carried an equal number and the Mayflower at eleven was crowded. Six thousand in all are on today's outing at Nantasket and Paragon Park. It was the largest party of mothers and children ever leaving the city on any single occasion.

Some of the family groups came from the North and the West ends. Others came from Roxbury, South Boston and different sections of the city. But Lynn, Allston, Salem and numerous nearby cities were represented, and not less than ten family groups came up from Hingham and Hull to be able to take part in the big event.

"The biggest thing of its kind ever pulled off by any one in this city for a decade past," enthusiastically declared Frederick L. Lane, general manager of the steamboat company.

"Guess the AMERICAN is going to keep me busy looking after mothers and children today, but it will be a pleasant task at that," was the laughing comment of George A. Dodge, manager of Paragon Park, whose co-operation with Mr. Lane and the AMERICAN made possible the big outing.

There was no confusion at the wharf. All had their tickets by presenting the Sunday AMERICAN Coupon and ten cents at the AMERICAN distributing stations, and they passed through the turnstile without delay or inconvenience. At Paragon Park the guests of the AMERICAN had the time of their lives.

Choose Your Wife by Shape of Her Head, Says Doctor

Good heads make good men. Bad heads make bad men.

Young people should be educated to choose their mates by the shape of the bumps on their heads.

We should not blame defectives, since they sent in no specifications for the shapes of their heads before they were born.

Every normal human being has certain centres in the back of the head where reside love for wife, children and society. When this development is lacking, we find the criminal.— William Windsor, Ph. D., LL.D., on "Eugenics of Crime," at the New Thought Form.

Elkes Kucharczuk, thirty-two, charged with attempted murder of Dolphus Eno, foreman at the New England Brick Company, Medford, on August 16, was today held in $1,000 for a hearing on September 2 in the Malden District Court. He shot himself after the alleged attempt. He created a commotion by tearing the bandages from his head. He had to be subdued by court officers.

MORE ROCKS AT SERVICE IN MATTAPOISETT

MATTAPOISETT, Aug. 25.—Further trouble at an evening meeting in the little Baptist church here, during which more rocks were thrown, has led today to a serious split in the congregation. William T. Farmer, the Boston shoe merchant, who has paid the salary of Lay Preacher Joseph Sykes, said today that some of the members of the church do not pay 10 cents a year toward its support.

The first show of strength between the two factions is promised for next Thursday evening, when, according to announcements, the Rev. Mr. Caswell will preach in the Town Hall and Lay Preacher Sykes in the church.

RECRUIT TWIRLERS WILL FILL THE BILL AT DETROIT TODAY

FRED ANDERSON IS PICKED TO BEAT DETROIT

LINEUP FOR TODAY.

Anderson, p.	Hall, p.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 25.—Manager Bill Carrigan of the Red Sox will use another recruit pitcher today in an effort to win his second straight game from the Tigers.

Fred Anderson, formerly of the old New England League, is the man booked to go the job. Anderson "made good" the minute he donned a Red Sox uniform, and although he lost in the West it was through no fault of his own for his pitching was all that could be desired.

The Sox players agree that Anderson is as good as Mosely. If he is, the Tigers will have to produce some very good pitching to get away with the game, for young Mosely certainly has the goods. The way he stood the Tigers on their heads in the first game was worth watching. Four hits and no runs facing a Crawford-Cobb combination is a very good record for a young pitcher getting his first taste of major league baseball.

Jennings also plans to send a young pitcher against the Red Sox today, and his selection lies between Hall and House. The veteran, Edgar Willett, who is generally effective against the Champions, is also a possibility.

Tris Speaker is making a hard try to catch up with Cobb and Jackson in the race for batting honors. He is hitting the ball viciously of late, and it looks as though he might get his when if either of the leaders show any inclination to slump in their work.

Carrigan may use several recruits during this series, although the chances are that he will play the regular lineup. The team has been going together so well that this is not a very good time to break up a winning combination.

McPhee Meets Tough Man in Babcock

The big crowd at the Pat Connolly-George Sandele mat bout last Thursday night at the Grand Opera House indicated that the following of the wrestling game is rapidly growing, and, that though Summer is not yet off the 1913 map, the right kind of a bout will always draw.

Next Thursday night George Tuohey looks for an even larger gathering at the theatre as he has arranged a contest between "Scotty" McPhee, the Worcester heavyweight, another Boston favorite, and Fred Babcock of Cleveland. They will wrestle best two falls out of three, catch-as-catch-can style.

Palzer Is Seeking Bout with Smith

NEW YORK, Aug. 25.—Tom O'Rourke, the manager of Al Palzer, the "White Hope," announced today that he is going to compel Gunboat Smith to meet Palzer either in New York or on the Coast if the former decisively defeats Frank Moran.

Palzer is matched to meet Moran in a ten-round battle at the St. Nicholas Rink the early part of next month. Palzer has not done any fighting since his memorable tussle with Luther McCarty in Los Angeles.

Breezy Paragraphs of Baseball News

Fans are puzzled by the Pittsburgh-Philadelphia deal by which the Pirates gave up Pitcher Camnitz and Infielder Bobby Byrne to the Phillies. In return the Corsairs got Dolan, who has been on the utility list this season.

Fifteen consecutive victories are now chalked up to the credit of Pitcher Walter Johnson of the Washington senators as a result of the Senators' victory over the White Sox yesterday. Some doubt has existed as to the exact number of wins officially accredited to Johnson, but the list of President Johnson of the American League show it is fifteen.

McMahon Best Batter in the N. E. League

By WILLIAM P. PETERS.

A veteran player is first in the individual averages of New England League today. The honors go to McMahon of the Brockton team, who, while a Lowell boy, has done most of his playing in the South. McMahon leads Wilson of Lynn by one point and the two are being pushed hard by Wood of New Bedford and Magee of Lowell. Hickman of Portland has passed his teammate, Bowcock, who led for many weeks of the present season.

The number of .300 hitters is down to twenty-one this week. Rube DeGroff of Lowell is one of those who have slumped. The premier striker of 1912 is below .300, and this is something unusual for him.

Eighteen batters have made 100 hits or over this season. Magee of the Lowell team leads with 142. With the season three weeks to go, Magee should bring his figure up to 160, at least.

STANDARDIZE IMPLEMENTS IN WORLD SPORTS

BERLIN, Aug. 25.—James E. Sullivan, secretary of the American Olympic Committee, accompanied by C. T. Kirby, president of the Amateur Athletic Union of America, is on his way to Paris, after rounding up all the unfinished business of the recent international conference held here.

"By far the most important and significant development of the conference," declared Mr. Sullivan before leaving here, "was the decision authorizing the construction of a set of athletic implements to be taken as the standards throughout the world in the future.

"Hereafter the hammer, discus, javelin and vaulting pole used by amateur athletes in any country will be the same as those used in all other countries.

"The decision symbolizes the whole work of the conference, for the world now has a uniform international standard for athletics, something which nations thus far have been unable to secure in either their postage, currency and their system of measurements."

Several complete sets of athletic apparatus will be especially constructed to order in America and will be sent to Europe to be used as models for manufacture. According to the rules they will be stamped "James E. Sullivan, Amateur Athletic Union."

FLYING PIRATES OPEN UP SERIES WITH PILGRIMS

The Pittsburgh Pirates, proud possessors of third place in the National League, are in town today for a three-game series with the Pilgrims. This will be the last appearance of Fred Clarke's disappointments this season. They seem at last to have hit something like the speed their makeup warrants and come from Philadelphia, where they succeeded in completely snuffing out any pennant chance for the Doolns.

With the exception of the St. Louis Cardinals, the Pirates are the only team in the league who have been bested to date in a series with the Pilgrims. All season the Boston team has proved one of their worst stumbling blocks, both here and in the Smoky City. The present speed of the visitors should make a Pilgrim cleanup unlikely, but several times this season the two teams have clashed when hope was high in the Pirate breast and the result was entirely in favor of the Hub representatives.

Pilgrims Regain Batting Strength.

During the St. Louis series the Pilgrims recovered their batting strength and should be able to make things decidedly interesting for Babe Adams, the rejuvenated McQuillan, Marty O'Toole and the other Pirate hurlers. Today, Hess will probably do the pitching, though Dickson, who has been very good against the present enemy might be given a chance at the game. For the Pirates, O'Toole or Adams look like the probable selections.

Bill Sweeney will still have charge of the team, unless Manager Stallings makes an unexpected return from Buffalo. It is highly improbable, however, that he will resume charge earlier than Tuesday.

"Dutch" Zwilling a Find for Stallings.

Reports from the West indicate that the Pilgrims have picked up a "find" in "Dutch" Zwilling, of the St. Joseph, Western League team. Zwilling is an outfielder and played with the White Sox back in 1911. He is a slugger through and through and what's more can place his hits. Although he bats left-handed, southpaw pitchers show great fear for him. In three years in the Western League he has batted for .342, .341 and .311. Last season, his biggest one, when he took part in 102 games during which time he slammed the ball safely 207 times. The previous year he played in 150 games, getting 181 hits and has so far this season played in 121 games, getting 142 hits.

A Valuable Substitute for "Hap" Myers.

Stallings generally looks for speed, but Zwilling is an exception to this rule. This does not mean that he is slow, for he is all as fast as the average major leaguer. It is said that trouble with his legs turned him back to the minors, but he seems to have outgrown this. Zwilling will prove a valuable substitute for "Hap" Myers at first base, a department in which the Pilgrims are not very strong in second string men. Although smaller than the average first baseman, he has played the bug a number of times and acquitted himself in admirable fashion.

M'LOUGHLIN AND WILLIAMS MEET IN TITLE MATCH

NEWPORT, Aug. 23.—Maurice E. McLoughlin and R. Norris Williams, who brought the Davis Cup back to America, will meet here tomorrow in the final round of the National tennis tourney. Both came through the semi-finals this morning in splendid style, the champion defeating Wallace Johnson, another Davis Cup player, easily and Williams downing Niles, the Boston star, after a fierce tussle.

The McLoughlin-Johnson match was the first played. A big gallery was out to watch the match and went wild when the San Francisco champion opened up in his most perfect style and swept through the first game without a falter, winning an easy love match. In the second, however, Johnson got his cut stroke working and by forcing the champion to a series of ground shots, which he does not like, brought the set to deuce. McLoughlin, however, went out on his service in the next two games, in the third set, McLoughlin again would not be denied, Johnson winning but a single game, the fourth.

The Niles and Williams match went four sets and while perhaps not as brilliant as that between the older stars, was remarkable for the speed and keenness of the play. The young cup star went out and won the first game with a brilliant series of back court shots after the count had been four all. The second set was even faster than the opener, the Boston player showing a wonderful rally after a poor start. The game went to deuce, but Williams again showed his wonderful finish and won out, 7–5. In the next set Niles came out with a rush and took advantage of a little slowness on the part of Williams and won the set, 6–3. In the final, however, Williams came back strong and Niles, showing the effects of three hard sets, was literally swept off his feet and lost the set and match, 6–1.

The summary:

M. E. McLoughlin defeated W. F. Johnson, 6–2, 7–5, 6–4.
R. N. Williams defeated N. W. Niles, 8–4, 7–5, 6–3, 6–1.

Girl Swimmer Is Nahant Race Star

Rose Pilonoff, Marion Gibson, Elsie Ackroyd and the other star swimmers of Greater Boston today have a new rival. Her name is Zita Moulton and she lives with her parents at No. 4 Greenmont street, Dorchester.

Miss Moulton is a trim little lass, eighteen years of age, and yesterday gave one of the gamest exhibitions of swimming ever seen around Boston. With a number of others, Miss Moulton started the long swim from Nahant to Revere. She had previously made up her toeboard swim and had also gone half way back to Nahant.

The water yesterday, however, was very cold and choppy. After covering about two miles of the course, the dapper mermaid was seized with a cramp in her side and was aided from the water by Jim and Joe Winston of East Boston, who accompanied the swimmers in a boat.

Zita was in poor condition, but the cramp soon left her side. After resting two minutes she announced that she was going to continue her swim, but she was advised not to do so. The daring Dorchester girl said she realized that she could not win the race, as she had quit the water, but she was determined to finish the contest, and dived into the water. She completed the race and finished twenty minutes ahead of her nearest competitor. Her time was 2h. 20m.

The feat is all the more noteworthy when it is known that several strong men quit after swimming less than half a mile.

Isabelle Lavery and Mae Barry also finished. Neither of these girls were forced to leave the water at any time during the race.

Montreal Now Ready to Sell Gilhooley

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—Owner Lichtenheim of the Montreal club was in town today to make a final attempt to sell Left Fielder Gilhooley to the highest bidder. He will call upon President Farrell of the New Yorks, Manager Evers of the Cubs, Manager Tinker of the Reds, President Ebbets of the Brooklyns and perhaps John Mcilraw, Lichtenheim, who wants $10,000 cash for Gilhooley two weeks ago, has decided to let him go for the best price offered.

There is a wide difference of opinion as to Gilhooley's ability to succeed in major league company. He is a player of the Willie Keeler order—an expert bunter and a fleet base runner. But some of the scouts declare that he has a weak throwing arm. It remains to be seen whether the Montreal magnate can drive a bargain or not.

Langford Is Picked to Win From Flynn

Heavyweights Clash in Twelve Round Battle at Atlas A A Tomorrow Night

By JACK CONWAY.

BOSTON will be the centre of the boxing world this week. Sam Langford, Esq., the powerful negro heavyweight from Cambridge is scheduled to clash with "Porky" Flynn in a twelve-round bout at the Atlas A. A. tomorrow night. This is the most important ring contest of the week and its result will be closely watched for by sport lovers throughout the country.

Langford is considered the logical opponent for Jack Johnson. He has not boxed in this country for two years and it is a question whether he is as good today as when he sailed for the land of the Southern cross.

If Sam has not gone back, he should defeat Flynn tomorrow night. He may win inside of the limit, but if he is not at his best Flynn may spring a huge surprise.

Even if "Ho Ho" is as good as ever, he will have to extend himself in order to conquer the West End heavyweight. Flynn will outweigh Langford by at least twenty pounds while he is six inches taller than the "Tar Baby." "Porky" is also a clever boxer, and if he uses a little head work he may be able to hold Sam at bay for twelve rounds.

If Flynn can get a draw with Langford, or even make a good showing, although he loses the decision, he will be one of the biggest drawing cards in the country. Promoters everywhere are eager to secure a white heavyweight who possesses the least bit of dash.

BOTH MEN READY TO GO.

The rival boxers are today resting on their oars as it were. They have trained hard and faithfully for the fray, and both feel confident of winning.

Langford has been training at North Reading. Sam has prepared for the "go" with Phil Schlossberg, heavyweight champion of the navy, and Jack Bruno, amateur light heavyweight champion. The "Tar Baby" has also had the assistance of Jack Read, the Australian light-weight champion.

Flynn has done all of his work at Winthrop. His training has been in charge of George Byers, one of the best-known boxing men in the East. Byers prepared Langford for many of his important bouts, but when Sam "broke" with "Porky" he took sides with Flynn and quit Langford's camp.

STRONG PRELIMINARY CARD

THE preliminary card is a strong one. There will be two eight-round and one six-round bout. "Young" Jasper will battle with Andy Cortes of Brooklyn. These boys have met before and they showed up well. Jasper has been training at Winthrop with Terry Brooks and believes he will be able to win from Cortez.

Joe Chick of Fall River and Jimmy Krause of Philadelphia are expected to put up a slashing battle. Neither of the men is a good boxer but both are sweet punchers. It therefore looks as though it would be a battle similar to the ones Joe Nelson and "Gunboat" Eldridge used to put up.

The preliminary will be a six-round affair and will bring together Teddy Murphy of Boston and Joe Quinn of Cambridge. Both boys weigh about 115 pounds.

COMMEND ATTACK ON A. A. U.

NUMEROUS letters have been received at this office commending the attack made in this column on the failure of the A. A. U. to aid amateur boxing. The work of the officials at many of the amateur tournaments has been very poor and the boxers have received but little consideration from some of the referees and judges, who conduct themselves as though they were members of some superior race of human beings.

A typical letter was received from Eddie Keevin, who writes:

Jack Conway, Boston AMERICAN.
I read your article in the AMERICAN this morning and am in accord with the officials of the A. A. U. for their lashy in assigning incompetent men to judge amateur boxing bouts. You are perfectly right in the stamp you make and it is about time that somebody put the light of publicity on conditions as they exist in amateur boxing hereabouts.

Yrs truly yours,
(Signed) EDDIE KEEVIN.

FORMS PLANS FOR GYMNASIUM.

EDDIE Mack, manager of Joe Egan of South Boston, considers the writer's suggestion to have quarters furnished where amateur boxers can train, a good one. Mack is a close student of the amateur boxing game and realizes as well as the next man the deplorable condition that it is in. Johnny Connolly, the South boxer, was the last star performer developed at an amateur show in this city.

FATALITY WILL HURT BOXING.

THE death of John "Bull" Young is regretted by boxing "fans" throughout the country. It will give the anti-boxing people another tool with which to attack the ring game. Young's death was due to poor muscle-making. He should never have been pitted against Willard, as he lacked experience and knew but little about the art of self-defence. He was big and strong and all that, but beef and strong muscles alone do not make a man a winner within the squared inclosure.

A death hardly ever results when two evenly matched men clash. The trouble comes when a novice battles a veteran. Many of our present day fight promoters are too greedy. They have the "get rich" fever which is sweeping over the United States like a great tidal wave. In their haste to accumulate a fortune they arrange matches that will pack their arenas and not contests that will be even and interesting. They fail to realize that boxing is liable to be prohibited if many more fatalities take place. Some of the boxing promoters in this country have not brains enough to grasp this fact.

Printers Play Tomorrow

The Boston Union Printers' baseball team, champs of the league, will clash tomorrow afternoon with the East Boston team at the Fenway Park grounds of the Red Sox.

McLoughlin Favorite in Newport Tourney

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 23.—The chance of a successful defiance of his title by Maurice E. McLoughlin of San Francisco against the three other survivors of last week's all-comers' tournament for the national lawn tennis championship was a matter of much discussion, and not a few wagers among Casino visitors today.

The odds on McLoughlin were three to one against the field, consisting of Nathaniel W. Niles of Boston, R. Norris Williams, 2d, and Wallace F. Johnson of Philadelphia.

In the semi-finals today Niles will meet M. Loughlin. It seemed to be the general opinion that the finals on Tuesday would be between Williams and McLoughlin.

SAY GOV. TENER IS PART OWNER OF PHILLIES

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 23.—The Dolan-Byrne-Cannitz deal has prompted a revival of the story that Governor Tener of Philadelphia is deeply interested in the Philadelphia club and that it was through his personal influence that Barney Dreyfus, owner of the Pirates, was induced to part with two veteran stars for a minor leaguer. Clarke, the Pirate manager, has announced that the deal will benefit his team for the reason that he long has been in need of a speedy man like Dolan. Clarke states that the Pirates have lost many games by one run because speed in base running was lacking.

Sport Dean Dead.

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—John Hodes, for ten years secretary to the New York State Racing Commission, is dead on his way prominent in racing, newspaper work and politics.

Sam Langford Eats as Much Food as Four Average Men

Here is the reason why Sam Langford has developed from a welterweight into a regular heavyweight. He is the champion eater of the pugilistic world. He consumes as much food at a single meal as would satisfy four or five average laboring men. Here is what the "Tar Baby" usually has for breakfast each morning at his North Reading camp:

Breakfast food, three fried eggs, one pound slice of ham, four rolls, three pears, three peaches and a cup of coffee.

The same bill of fare is repeated three or four times. Sam claims he cannot fight well unless he has plenty to eat. Joe Woodman says he will supply the food as long as the "Tar Baby" keeps knocking out his opponents.

WILEY TO MEET CARMAN IN BIG REVERE RACE

Fresh from a tour of conquest in Europe, Clarence Carman, the speedy Newark pacefollower, is at Revere, where he is preparing for his special match race tomorrow night with George Wiley of Syracuse, middle distance champion of America.

Carman went abroad last Spring and met with immediate success, repeatedly winning the big events on the Continental tracks. American promoters sought his services unsuccessfully, and his presence in this country is the result of an appeal by his parents, who felt that their minor son had been away too long.

Last year was Carman's first behind the motors, and in a great measure he is entitled to the credit for the success of the paced racing sport at the present time. From his first race last year he won steadily, and when defeated it was only by the narrowest kind of a margin.

THE TUNNEL

The Greatest Story of Its Kind Since Jules Verne

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

OVER two hundred miles out under the ocean, three thousand men are at work pushing a great tunnel out under the Atlantic, the most gigantic engineering scheme ever conceived by the brain of man. Rives, the chief engineer of the new work, has just arrived on the ocean, after a trip from shore in a tunnel train running over a hundred miles an hour. Suddenly there is an explosion and men and machinery are swept backward by a tremendous blast. Then follows a scene of horror. Rives and a few survivors stumble on feet away from the disaster, and after hours they come into the view of faint lights at main station No. 4.

A train is standing there, but just as the leaders of the survivors reach the steps of the rear car, the train slides out into the tunnel and leaves them screaming and cursing and running in the dark.

The story then goes back to the beginning of the great project. A score of financiers are gathered on the roof of the fifty-two-story Hotel Atlantic, called together by the summons of Lloyd, the master man of money. There, introduced by Rives, McKendree Allan, the inventor, tells them of his great plan to tunnel the Atlantic. "My tunnel," he says, "is going to be 3,100 miles long."

The tunnel city is built on the Jersey plains, and work is pushed at top speed. Twenty thousand men, with great dredgers, push down into the bowels of the earth. Similar scenes are being enacted in Bermuda, Fayal, at Finisterre and on a great plain beyond London. Allan is the moving spirit everywhere. He is almost never at his home in Tunnel City, and his wife tells Rives how deeply she is hurt. Mrs. Allan and Rives find they love one another, and they kiss. He blames himself, but she tells him it could not be helped.

When the news of the disaster in the tunnel reaches the surface, the workers go crazy. Hardiman, Rives' chief of staff, is mobbed and does for his life. He races in his auto and tells Mrs. Allan. Not supposing the mob is anywhere near her house, she goes out on the street. Allan returns to Tunnel City to find his wife and child slain and Rives, his best friend, shut up in the tunnel and probably dead also.

Allan runs a rescue train into the tunnel and finds a few laborers and, after a short rest, makes a fresh attempt to find Rives.

THE smoke moved down on them like a living foe, grouping its way along the walls, creeping through cross-galleries, filling the stations, silent, opaque and resistless. But the ventilator had been sucking it out and forcing in millions of cubic yards of fresh pure air, and it seemed to grow thinner, little by little, as they advanced.

It was slow and terrible work. They climbed over and through wrecked trains, ripped up ties and broken timbers. And the dead were everywhere.

They were some two miles past the little sub-station when Allan stopped suddenly and held up his hand.

"Listen," he exclaimed in a low voice. "I think I heard a call."

The others stopped as they were bidden. For more than a minute they listened intently, but there was no sound but the faint whirr of some distant ventilator and the drip-drip of water.

"I'm sure I heard it," insisted the chief as Lefevre shook his head. "I'll give a yell now and everybody listen."

He hallooed up to the tunnel and his voice died away in the distance. Then faint, but clear, as a voice sounds from far away over the water at night, came an answering hail.

"By God, there's some one up the gallery!" exclaimed Lefevre and plunged on. The three dashed ahead, slipping and stumbling, and occasionally stopping to shout again. Nearly always they heard the answering shout and nearer each time. It was close at hand, but they seemed unable to get closer, and finally it began to die away.

FOUND

"We've gone past him!" cried Allan, suddenly.

"He never couldn't," protested his aide.

"We must have," Allan insisted. "I know—he was in one of the cross galleries."

They scrambled back through the darkness and began searching the cross galleries. At the second one back they were greeted with a perfect storm of fresh air. Into this they turned, and halfway up they came upon a strange spectacle.

A ventilator opened in the little gallery and against the wall was a generator still purring out oxygen. By the side of it sat a bald-headed old man. A few locks of white hair still streamed from his bare, white scalp. His face was yellowed and seamed into the dim lantern-light. He seemed terribly emaciated and withered, but he looked up with a smile that showed remarkably young and sound, white teeth. Lying with his head in his lap was the body of a gigantic negro, his blue lips drawn back in a sardonic grin.

"I knew you'd come, old man," wheezed the withered one, reaching up a hand as if for help to rise. "I knew you'd come."

And then Allan knew him.

"Rives—Rives!" he gasped, between a shout and sob.

The next instant his arms were around the pitiful bundle and he had lifted it to its feet. The negro's head slid off and struck a flat stone with a hollow thump.

Rives, or what had been Rives, clung to Allan's coat with one hand, and with the other he pointed down, while Allan held him close in a strong grip.

"I'm all right, Mac, old man," he said, feebly, and smiled again. "But that nigger—that nigger took a lot out of me, and—he died after all. Too bad!"

THE STRIKE

RIVES lay between life and death in the hospital, and for the first time in years Allan himself was in direct charge at Tunnel City. The work of rescue was over, the bodies of the dead had been recovered. The last train had come out of the tunnel, but the far end were still choked with debris; but in all the great maelstrom of industry scarcely a wheel stirred.

Allan and his staff of engineers watched the mammoth and strove to organize and heroic endurance to stem the tide that was setting in against them. It was in vain. The armies of toilers stood idle and numb and looked on. They and their wives stood in long rows on the terraced cement, silent and still. The great lighting plants, the pumps and ventilator system were all operated by engineers, who dropped by the side of their work and slept in broken naps.

Hordes of curiosity seekers from New York and Philadelphia added to the confusion and the difficulty of the problem. Allan doubled the railroad fare, but even this did not load them off. For four weeks Allan and his staff strove night and day, and at last they began to make headway; but still there was no sign from the laborers. At last the final spark of the fire had been quenched, the smoke disappeared and the fragments of the shattered driller were removed. Then the heart of the explosion was exposed. The theory that a pocket of highly explosive gas had been discharged by a blast was proved correct.

They found a chamber some hundred and fifty feet in depth, about a thousand feet wide and more than half a mile long. It was perfectly dry, and its sides, ceilings and floor were composed of a new mineral called "schmactite," of which they had found traces in the boring. It was light and crumbly, not unlike chalk, and had been discovered to be rich in radium.

In its length the chamber followed roughly the line of the tunnel and meant a saving of a half-mile of boring; but the work was at a standstill.

Girl Stars to Give Exhibition at AMERICAN'S Great Swimming Carnival Saturday

Rose Pitonof, the Dorchester girl who has a good claim to the title of "Champion Girl Swimmer of the World," will give an exhibition of swimming and diving at the AMERICAN'S swimming carnival next Saturday in the Charles River Basin.

She was the first of the famous group of girl swimmers of Tenean Beach to swim from Charlestown Bridge to the Light. Since then she has made remarkable swims in New York and in the English Channel.

She had her first swimming successes in one of the AMERICAN'S carnivals.

Marion Gibson, another Tenean Beach girl, who a few weeks ago duplicated Miss Pitonof's swim to the Light, will demonstrate her stroke and will give fancy dives.

Isabel C. Lavery, a favorite at the Wood Island Park Beach, has entered her name for the race which is the crowning event of the carnival, and carries Noddie Island's fortune on her shoulders.

Thirteen-year-old Bella Goodman of Beachmont is practicing the trudgeon stroke daily at Revere Beach. "Billy" Murray, the swimming instructor at Wollaston Beach, has introduced the "scoop stroke" and says his proteges who are to take part in the carnival are to use it for the first time. He said today:

Races Free to All.

"There are many fine swimmers at this popular resort, particularly among the girls, who show exceptionally fine form in swimming and diving. Long distance swimming is getting to be a fad with most of them and they have made the swim to Squantum and Hangman's Island several times and are now looking for still harder tests. Some of the leaders are Miss Metcalf, Helen Musgrave, Mabel Doring and the O'Neil sisters.

DON'T FORGET THAT THE RACES WILL BE ABSOLUTELY FREE TO ALL.

Every girl who finishes in the big race will receive a handsome medal.

All a girl has to do is to fill out the coupon and return it to the Editor of the Swimming Carnival, Boston AMERICAN, No. 80 Summer street, Boston, and she will be entered as in the big event.

The entry list closes Wednesday at 5 P. M.

The course is the same as that of last year, namely, from the Metropolitan Park Commission's float, opposite the Union Boat club house on the Boston esplanade, up stream to the stake boat, which will bear the letter "B," turn the stake boat, leaving it to the left, and return down stream to the starting point. The distance is one and one-half miles and 200 feet.

The bathing beauties will be officially endorse in preparations to make the event one of the most successful in the history of the Basin.

Cassidy Hits at State Board

Mr. Cassidy has told you of the presence of saccharine in soda water. It is used because it is 500 times as sweet as sugar, and therefore is cheaper than sugar. Here's a case in point right at your own doors.

By HARRY P. CASSIDY.

I have often told you of the food dopers and cheaters using saccharin instead of sugar to sweeten their soda water and other soft drinks.

Inspector W. F. Farrington of the New Hampshire State Board of Health seized some ginger ale on sale at the Rockingham Park. It was being sold by an R. L. Burns.

Burns was arrested, and tried before Judge Hall. The trial developed that Burns had bought the ginger ale from Woods & Dunnell of Haverhill, Mass., who manufactured the stuff.

Judge Hall fined Burns $5 and costs, amounting to $9.95.

I have charged that the Massachusetts State Board of Health was inefficient, and that much of this saccharin doped cheap soft drink stuff is being sold in this State.

The saccharin seized by the New Hampshire authorities was made here in Massachusetts. It should have been seized and the firm fined long ago by the State Board of Health.

But the State Board of Health, through laxity of inspection and apathy toward all pure food legislation allowed a shoker State to slow up the rotten conditions existing right here in Massachusetts.

Government officials assured me the case would be attended to. Massachusetts State authorities, as usual, think this poisonous stuff is good enough for Massachusetts consumers. But New Hampshire doesn't.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

"YOU'RE right, Count," laughed a voice over their shoulder. "And one of us ain't a bad looking man, either."

It was Peter, who tried a bit of gossip as well as his neighbor, and who now came forward smiling.

"I feel so complimented, Mr. Pierre, and it is very good for you to say so," returned the "Count" with a grandiose bow. "It is no opinion of us ladies in so hedge."

The butler then winked slyly at Gryce, and satisfied that he had effectually discomfited the footman, proceeded to put questions to the detective as to his reasons for the interest he showed in this girl, which that functionary had will and experience enough to successfully parry.

Peter helped him; for Peter was a rival of the butler's in more than one field, and in his good-natured way invariably took part against him in any controversy, and it was from Peter that Mr. Gryce finally got the acknowledgment that this young woman, or lady, as he persisted in calling her, usually wore a long, black ulster and made her appearance in the evening.

Now this was satisfactory, in the closet of Mildred Farley at Mrs. Olney's house there was a long, black ulster, and she, as we know, was accustomed to take her work home evenings.

Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green

"But she didn't have the ulster on the last time she came, oh, no," continued Peter. "And I don't know what it was made the difference, but she looked fetne. O, very well I'm tells ye I wouldn't have known her at all, at all, but for her cold brown veil and little hoodlng. There was the same as before and so was the air of her. Not a word nor the divil of a look for one of us; but being the night o' the wedding, she got out o' me head, for sure I had enough else to mind."

This last admission was a surprise, but Mr Gryce was accustomed to surprises, so he kept quite still; the more so that he saw the butler was about to speak, and he always preferred to glean his facts through the questions of other people rather than his own.

"Zat girl here on Miss Gretorex's wedding night? I ask you was mistake, Pierre."

"Mistaken is be it not; when these two bundles lay here in mewsit at the back door. It wasn't only here she was, but it's helpin Miss Gretorex to dress she was, and divil a minute she had to spare, either, being just in the nick of time to be of any help at all, at all, to her. I didn't see her leave, though."

HER ULSTER

Mr. Gryce felt his interest cool. Reason told him how improbable it was that this person with all her mysteries, could have been the young lady of Julius Mudesorth. Even if this house had not been miles distant from the C—— Hotel, where he had himself seen her at seven o'clock of that same night, the great improbability of her flying from her own nuptials to assist in this very humble capacity at those of another was too manifest for his considerations even. It became habit was strong in him and habit forbade him to leave a subject till he had exhausted it, he put in a word which he thought must settle the matter.

"You are an observing man," he remarked to Peter, "and soon to have noticed this young lady's dress. Was she big she carried a small, yellow one?"

"It was not, thin." That person emphatically replied, while the butler shook his head. "It was small, that it was, but not a smark of yellow about it at all. I see it mayys the time. Its black it was."

"And would you know it if you saw it again?"

"I'll not say that, sur; but I could tell if it was the same kind of one."

Mr. Gryce smiled and produced from his capacious pocket the bag which had been found by him in the doctor's phaeton.

"Was it like this one?" he asked, holding it up between the two men, with the initials toward Peter, and too black side toward the butler.

"No," was the former's reply, and "Dhu," that of the latter.

He whirled the bag about.

"I never have seen so Haggree on him like sat!" now exclaimed the butler.

"By the powers that's it," was, on the contrary, Peter's response.

Mr. Gryce laughed and put the bag back in his pocket.

"You don't agree," he said.

"We do that," returned Peter.

But Mr. Gryce would not be convinced. He saw that if this was the bag that Grey had been in the habit of seeing on the arm of the girl who had visited Miss Gretorex, that it had always been carried with the initials inside. And this again seemed a great improbability. He was about convinced that he was on a false trail. Disappointed and dissatisfied, he therefore cut his conversation short, and in a few minutes was about to leave this house for the second time in everything but a happy frame of mind. But this time he did not go out by the side door. He was in the kitchen, and he naturally sought the kitchen exit. In doing this, his eyes fell upon the gravel walk that ran about the house. "Humph!" was his mental ejaculation.

But he saw something the next moment—saw by the time stepped into the yard—which called from him something more than an exclamation. This was a small piazza, with one or two steps from the ground, for the use, as it appeared, of the servants of the house. It was square in shape and had a high balustrade about it, terminating in pillars that supported the roof. It was the color of this balustrade which drew his attention. It was of a bright and peculiar brown and seemed to have been but lately painted.

ANOTHER CLEW.

"Can it be that I have Lero found what I have so long been searching for!" he queried. And stepping upon the piazza he ran his eye along the balustrade with the most careful scrutiny. Suddenly he paused, looked closer, and gave utterance to a sound expressive of satisfaction and keen wonder. From the supporting pillar nearest the steps a portion of paint had been rubbed, of the size and shape of the tongue on Mildred Farley's dress, and dried the thin coating yet remaining was a woolly fuzz so evidently blue in color that even this old and experienced worker among marvels was taken aback and though he had never seen anything finer or more conclusive.

It was with a very grave face he stepped back into the kitchen.

"Excuse me," said he, "but what a fine porch you have outside. I think I will come and visit you some evening next Summer. Can rest there, eh?"

"Well, now, can you hear that?" laughed the good-natured Peter.

"Oh, the master had used using it at the time o' the wedding—with for I don't know—and it being well used up by that same time by a rain shower, the count there bought a pot o' paint and went over it on his own account. It didn't dry good like, and the master thanked the count, so he did, but didn't like the job, I think. He says the count have dollars for disapointin' him do ye mind?"

And Peter, evidently thinking he had got the best of his master this time, laughed himself long and loud.

But Mr. Gryce did not laugh. A problem dark with mysteries was before him, and he had no disposition to mirth, and but little patience with those who had

Their Married Life

Helen Spends a Morning in the Louvre and Meets a Very Interesting American

By Mabel Herbert Urner.

HELEN'S real more for going to the Louvre was to say that she had been there.

Many other tourists have been actuated by this same motive, though they would probably not admit it. They wearily drag themselves through the endless galleries, then come home, and for years after gush over the "great masterpieces" they saw "in the Louvre."

Warren had promptly and emphatically declared that he had no intention of going, that it was too "blooming hot" to trail around and look at pictures, but Helen felt she could not face the amazed exclamations of the folks at home: "And you DIDN'T go to the Louvre! You were in Paris all that time and didn't spend a day there?"

So this morning, fortified by her guide book and a strong sense of duty, Helen started out.

Better take a cab," Warren had advised. "You'll need all your energies when you get there. There're miles of those galleries."

Because it was very warm, and because the two weeks of constant sightseeing were beginning to tell on her, Helen did take a cab.

"The Louvre, the Louvre!" she instructed the driver.

"Oui, oui, madame," and they were off.

But when he drew up Helen found that he had taken her, not to the Louvre Galleries, but to the Bagashu du Louvre —one of the great department stores of Paris. Excitedly she sprang on the glass door.

"No—NO! The art galleries; The Louvre! The LOUVRE!"

His face lit up with understanding. He jabbered something reassuringly and quickly turned the car.

AT LAST

A few blocks further on he again stopped, jumped down and opened the door with an air of triumph.

It was the Louvre HOTEL he had brought her to this time!

Helen, flushed and excited, almost screamed, "The LOUVRE! The LOUVRE!"

The man looked blank. It was not until she pointed to the name in her guide book, that his expression changed and he exclaimed joyfully:

"MUSEE; MUSEE du Louvre;"

That any Paris cabman should not know what you meant by the Louvre, Helen thought, indignantly, as they whirled off once more! She had been anxiously watching the taximeter, which now registered over two francs.

This Winter she would study French! If ever she came to Paris again, she would not be at the mercy of these stupid drivers.

When they finally turned into a large courtyard, Helen recognized the stately buildings of the Louvre beyond. But the meter registered still another franc before the car stopped at the entrance.

Up a flight of marble steps, through a massive door, and Helen stood in a great, vaulted corridor. Checking her parasol, she started down one of the long galleries. At first she wandered around aimlessly, then turned to her guide-book.

Baedecker devotes just ninety-one closely printed pages and nine maps to the Louvre, and Helen waded through them hopelessly confused.

Then she discovered that she had come in at a side entrance, and the itinerary of Baedecker starts from the main entrance. How she knows where that was, Helen felt it would be easier to go out and come in again, so that she could begin with the "From the main vestibule, we enter to the left the Galerie Denon, whose bronze copies——".

To find where you are in a guide book is an obsession of most tourists, and Helen hardly saw the paintings, for her eyes were glued to her Baedecker in an effort to find their number.

She tried to think of some particularly famous pictures she ought to see. The "Mona Lisa"—but that had been stolen. "The Last Supper," was that in the Louvre? "The Horse Fair," was that here? And whose "Madonna" was it that was so famous?

THE VENUS

By all this it will be seen that Helen's knowledge of art was not exhaustive.

At the foot of a broad stone stairway was a group of statuary. She thought of the Venus de Milo. Surely that would not be so hard to find as a picture. But in the floor below the galleries of ancient sculpture seemed endless. At length, in the distance, she saw the famous armless statue against the red velvet background.

It was in an alcove alone, protected by a brass railing, against which several tourists were leaning.

One is supposed to stand before this statue in rapt admiration of its classic lines. But Helen's thoughts were somewhat different. She was wondering how her own well formed little body, of which she was secretly very proud, would compare with this statue.

She had heard of the large waist of the Venus de Milo, and now she noted the breadth of the hips. She smiled as she thought of them in a bobbie skirt. And the feet—even for the size of the statue they seemed large. Instinctively Helen glanced at her own small russet shoes.

But she liked the way Venus wore her hair, and promptly decided to try arranging her own that way. Only her hair was not wavy, possibly it would not look so well.

There are not exactly the thoughts that are supposed to thrill one when they gaze at the Venus de Milo, but this is precisely what Helen thought, and what probably nine women out of ten do think, although they would strenuously deny it.

For the next half hour Helen wandered through aisles of ancient sculpture. There were statues in all forms of mutilation, headless, armless and legless. Of some only the torso remained, and there were many detached arms, legs and hands. No doubt they were all very fine, but Helen thought them rather gruesome.

HELP

She had now given almost two hours to pictures and statuary, and with a sense of duty fulfilled, she was eager to look up the one exhibition in which she had a real and genuine interest—the antique furniture.

From the guide book she gleaned that the furniture was in another wing of the building. But which wing? And how could she reach it? Uncertainly she approached a guide, but he could not speak a word of English, and his French was both fast and unintelligible.

"Perhaps I can help you? I was just going to look up that furniture."

Helen turned quickly. The voice was American, and so was the tall, well-groomed man.

"Oh, thank you," flushing self-consciously. "It's hopeless trying to find things here if you don't speak French."

"Yes. It is a little awkward. There's no excuse for their not having English-speaking guides. Now I think we'll find this the shortest cut to the other wing."

When they reached the furniture Helen started to thank him and pass on alone. But in the most natural and matter-of-fact way he called her attention to a Louis XIV desk by the window. It's slightly restored, but I think that's one of the best pieces in the collection."

He drew from his pocket the museum's catalog in French, found the number of the desk and annotated the notes about it.

Before Helen realized it she was viewing the collection with this stranger and enjoying every moment of it. He seemed thoroughly familiar with every period of French furniture, and they lingered there almost an hour.

There are some Gobelin tapestries in the next wing that I should like to show you," he suggested, when they had exhausted this gallery.

HER FLUTTER

From the tapestries he took her through the ceramics, and from there through the bronzes.

"I'm afraid you're tired," he turned to her suddenly with a note of concern. "These galleries are very exhausting. I think there's much better in one of the wings here—if I may suggest——"

"Oh, no, no," hastily. "I must go back to the hotel for luncheon. I had no idea it was so late. I have enjoyed it so much—and you've been very kind." "Most of the enjoyment has been mine," gravely.

"What address shall I give the driver?" as he helped her in.

"Hotel Bonceray," flushed Helen. "Why, that's where I stopped last year," the note of pleasure in his voice was unmistakable, "and where I still dine very often. I shall hope to be fortunate enough to see you there some evening," and he stood back with raised hat as the taxi moved off.

With her thoughts in a turmoil, Helen gazed unseeingly out the window as she was whirled back to the hotel. Mingled with an almost guilty self-consciousness, there was a sense of exhilaration, too, the exhilaration that every woman feels when she is unexpectedly made to realize that she is still young and attractive.

It was not until she went to pay the cabman and found a brass check in her pocketbook that Helen remembered she had left her parasol at the side entrance of the Louvre. She had not intended to take a cab, nor even to come back to the hotel until evening, yet these things seemed minor details now.

It had been so long since Helen had had anything to flutter over that she could scarcely be blamed for fluttering just a little over this.

Untested.

"Yes, sir," said the successful manufacturer, "no man can sell his factory products these days unless they have been thoroughly tested."

"Oh, I don't know," replied another equally successful manufacturer. "We manage to sell our product without testing it."

"You do? What is your line?"

"Dynamite."

The Dances of Today

By EVELYN NESBIT THAW

By EVELYN NESBIT THAW

"PUBLIC opinion is steering a steady course toward a definite goal in its attitude regarding turkey trotting. You remember, of course, the old quotation, "first scorn, then pity, then embrace"—well, that is exactly the course for the turkey trot cup. First horror struck amazement, then amused toleration, then the Everybody's doing it-I-must-hurry-and-learn eagerness.

"The dance of today will not come into its own and rise above criticism until there is a proper knowledge of how and when and what next."

But while everyone is doing it, not everyone is doing it correctly; and the dance of today will not come in to its own and rise above popular criticism and acceptation, until there is the proper knowledge of how and when and what next.

In a crowded ballroom if everybody is merely expressing what the music means to them and swaying to the rhythm the dance brings to their own individual minds there will be bumping and sliding and all sorts of antics that give the satirical writer a chance to libel the dance of today to the Moco woolings and the Nautch girl postures of the back water civilizations of yesterday.

Last week I gave you three simple rules to fix in your minds before attempting the dances of today; stand well away from your partner to allow for free individual freedom of motion, keep your feet on the floor to insure gliding instead of hopping, and hold the body—including shoulders—firm and steady.

Today I want to add an almost equally important rule. Learn your steps and dance them as far as possible with one and the same partner—do this at least until you are sure of yourself; for if every time you dance, you have to readjust yourself to a different sort of guidance, and a new set of steps, you will never master any part of the dance you are trying to learn, but will dance at your goal instead of toward it.

THE TANGO

Today I am going to give you an idea of the Tango—not the exotic, southern Tango of the Argentine, but a Tango more suited to and more characteristic of our Northern race. They say the Cardras of the Hungarian peasant can be danced in all its perfection by the Hungarian peasant and no other race can surpass it. So the Tango Argetina is mean for the man and woman of Castilian blood. With this in view, and with the Tango Argentina as a basis, my dancing partner, Mr. Clifford, has arranged the North American Tango, of which I will give you a sketch.

First consider the position—stand with the man's right and the girl's left shoulder almost touching, right and left hands are clasped at waist height and held with unbent arms straight out ahead of the couple whose heads are turned forward and whose bodies are ready for forward motion in the direction of the outside arms; the man's right arm is at the girl's waist, and her left arm crosses his right as is shown in the first picture. Now let me add a little secret that adds for graceful dancing of the North American Tango—the girl must lean slightly back and away from the man's support for arm and her partner inclines forward from the waist.

There are six steps or figures in Mr. Clifford's Tango, which will be found practical and pretty for ballroom dancing; and what is more, I think you will find them easy to master. Always begin a Tango step with the outside foot. Beginning thus, dance forward with arched foot and pointed toe in stately walking measure for two counts; during the third count the girl turns in to the right, swinging to face her partner, who holds her out at his left side. This step is taken on the girl's right foot, and is followed on the fourth count by a little backward dip on the left foot.

THE REVERSE

Then reverse this step, advancing away from the outpointing hands and then swing back into movement one. Advance and retreat thus eight times. I will describe back and forward thus, eight times in all.

Step two is illustrated by the second picture. Advance with outer foot first, through two counts, on the third give a modest little kicking step as illustrated, and on the fourth count turn to reverse.

Step three is very much like step one except that for a little dip on the fourth count, a deep curtsey is substituted.

Step four is somewhat like step two, but for the kick on count three, a long forward gliding step is substituted—the long glide that is characteristic of the Tango Argentina is here introduced into the North American Tango.

Step five—advance for two counts, and on count three mark time with the outward foot four through counts, swaying gently while doing this step. The last figure is very pretty and very simple—advance through four counts and turn slowly through four counts, and then do the reverse step away from the outstretched hands for four counts.

The steps may be done forward and in reverse order, or each step may be repeated to the number of four figures of each or eight as I have suggested.

And I do hope that patience, practice, careful following of directions and good music to inspire you will make each of you who read and follow, an expert in the pretty steps of the modest and graceful North American Tango.

The pictures reproduced today, especially posed for this page, show Evelyn Nesbit Thaw's way of dancing the Tango—the kind of Tango she believes to be the best and most graceful variant of the South American dance of that name.

This dance, in which Mrs. Thaw has the help of Jack Clifford, she has named the North American Tango, because it is more suited to Northern methods of dancing than its South American namesake.

The Manicure Lady

"THAT was a brilliant young man for you, George," said the Manicure Lady, "that young fellow that was just in here having his nails did. He has just come back from the country, and all the time I was working on his paddles he was telling me about his Summer flirtations at the lake. The way he talked about throwing his spell over the fair sex, he must be a kind of modern Lord Byron, though he don't shape up much for looks or brains if you compare him with that Pompadour."

"I got no time for them young warts like him," declared the Head Barber.

"Neither have I," agreed the Manicure Lady. "But I always like to listen to Joes like him, because it is about all the amusement I get outside of talking to intellectual gent like you. This young fellow told me in perfect confidence, of course, that a married lady in the boarding house where he got his eggs was kind of interested in him, and that she admired him because he rowed her three times around the lake without getting tired.

"He was showing me what strong forearms he had, and I suppose they was fairly strong arms for a bookkeeper but not up to the village blacksmith brand. He said that she had invited him to call some time when he got back to the city, and that was why he was in having his nails did.

"I feel kind of sorry for the poor young simp, at that. I know just about what the game was, because I seen it played more than once at the Summer resort at which I have been at. Some nibble aged married lady gets tired of setting on the porch, and when she sees that all the giggling girlies gets chances to go rowing on the lake, she looks kind of langushing at some husky young swimmer that she knows can row and swim well enough to get her back safe to shore. Then he begins to think that he has won somebody's fluttering heart with his fatal beauty, and hires a rowboat by the week, which saves the married lady quite a little pin money, and guarantees her an escort that she can boss around. Of course there is always a little scandal, but she doesn't care for that as long as she can be out on the water, and the young man, of course, just glories in the scandal. That kind of fellow always does. When his vacation is over he finds that he is out quite a little for boat hire, but his arms is tanned fine, and he has a invitation to call some time and meet the family.

"Brother Wilfred got stung that way once. He was up to a lake in the Catskills, and a beautiful married woman that was there with her two children seemed kind of alone, so she beamed on Wilfred. You know them poets, George. Every time a good-looker beams on them the beans is spilled. My poor brother wrote about ten pomes to her eyes, and rowed her and the two kids around the lake until his hands was all puffed up and his pocketbook all flat. He had a awful crush on her, and some of the times he wrote to her was almost real literature, she said. I remember four of them lines:

"The moonlight nestles in your glorious hair;
Where could it find a more enchanting lair?
The lake casts longing glances at your lips;
Where could it find more sweetly sacherine sips?

"That Fall he called on her in the city, and her husband was awful nice to Wilfred. Her husband was a biz prince of a fellow, and Wilfred seen at a glance that she loved her husband only."

"But it ain't always that way," said the Head Barber.

Up-to-the-Minute Jokes

The little agricultural village had been filled with "Lecture on Keats" for over a fortnight. The evening arrived at length, bringing the lecturer ready to discourse on the poet.

The advertised chairman, taken ill at the last moment, was replaced by a local farmer. He briefly introduced the lecturer, and terminated his remarks by saying:

"And now, my friends, we shall soon all know what I personally have often wondered—what are Keats?"

"I will tell him the moment he comes in," the assistant answered; "meanwhile put a bread poultice on it, and renew it every two hours."

Keep Your Blood Cool

by Right Kind of Food and Enjoy Hot Weather

It's largely a matter of selecting the hot weather diet with reason.

Summer is Nature's season of activity—seed-time, growing-time, harvest-time—a time of expansion, energy—and Man is influenced to do his part—to put forth greater effort because activity is in the very air.

BUT—caution is necessary to avoid excessive heat from combustion (digestion) of heavy, greasy food, (Nature's way of generating body-heat in winter) in addition to the heat of the summer atmosphere.

Grape-Nuts

is the Ideal Food for hot weather because, being largely predigested (and concentrated) in the making at the factory, it is quickly absorbed, a small quantity affording great endurance with little effort in digesting it.

Grape-Nuts, made of Whole Wheat and Barley, contains all the natural elements of these cereals, including the phosphate of potash grown in the grain for rebuilding waste tissue cells, especially of brain and nerves.

Try for breakfast, lunch or supper:—

A Little Fruit; Saucer of Grape-Nuts and Cream; A Soft Boiled Egg; Slice of Crisp Toast, and a Cup of Postum, hot—or iced with sugar and lemon.

Surprising how cool, yet full of healthy energy and "go," one feels on such a meal no matter what the weather.

"There's a Reason"

IRISH UPHOLD U. S. RIGHT IN CANAL DISPUTE

CHICAGO, Aug. 25.—One of the greatest Irish demonstrations in this country and one that is expected to leave its impress on the fight for Irish home rule, now almost accomplished, was the thirty-eighth annual picnic of the United Irish Societies of Chicago, held at Brand's Park, in this city. Fifteen thousand persons visited the park during the day and evening, and more than $5000 was collected for the home rule cause.

President James T. Clarke of the United Irish Societies read to the assemblage a telegram from William Randolph Hearst favoring home rule, which was greeted with warm approval.

One of the important features of the day was the resolutions prepared in advance and passed by unanimous vote, opposing the British ownership over the Panama Canal tolls.

The resolutions strongly uphold the view of the United States that this country, having built the canal and paid for it without aid, should have the right of passing her own ships through it without paying tolls and that the attitude of the United States is entirely within its rights as a nation and not subject to the criticism of any other nation.

The work of John E. Redmond, the parliamentary leader, in forcing the home rule bill to the verge of final passage, also is highly commended.

The resolutions and part of the preamble are:

We congratulate the people of the Union upon the approaching completion of the Panama Canal. When our fortresses are builded and our guns set against the sea, when its gates are freely open to our flag and restricted to the rest of the world, it will mark the decline of British power or that now controls every international waterway on the globe.

England rose to greatness because every ocean highway sent its carriers beneath her guns. But when our colossal labor is performed a third of the world's coast line and all the shipping of the Western hemisphere will pay homage to our power and obedience to our command.

With jubilee rejected and waterway complete America can stand in peace and safety, undeceived by the soft hand extended from the east or the one ally and the flaming sword of war flashing in the West from another.

We send unanimous greetings to John E. Redmond, his colleagues and his party, and we stand in wondrement before the miracle he and his followers have wrought. The oppressed have left the prison; the destroyer has left his cell; the hunted has left his hiding; the crushed has resumed his strength; and Ireland stands with sceptre of power and the word of command, and added by her fallen neighbors, is giving law to the British Empire.

That as a part of the American we say to the nation, "We adhere to the letter of the father of our country. We should keep clear of entangling alliances' and when favors are to be bestowed or friendships made it will be with men and peoples who mingled their blood with ours on American battlefields in freedom's cause."

Be It Resolved, That as a nation we are yield no prestige and abandon no military or marine right at the command or request of any foreign nation on earth.

Be It Resolved, That our hearts shall remain true, our purposes firm and our support unwavering until an Irish parliament and an Irish government stand in the midst of Erin to make the laws for the Irish people as did the parliament of Tara in the ancient day.

Mr. Hearst's Message to Irish-Americans

"I Believe Sincerely in Home Rule for Ireland."

CHICAGO, Aug. 25.—James T. Clarke, president of the United Irish Societies, has asked that a message from William Randolph Hearst be given to the Irish of America. The telegram was read by Mr. Clarke at a celebration of the Irish societies in Chicago, August 16. The celebration included a great demonstration in favor of home rule, and Mr. Hearst's message expressing his belief in the justice of the home rule principle was greeted enthusiastically. Mr. Clarke wired Mr Hearst asking that the message be given to the newspapers of the country for publication. The telegram follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 15.—As an American believing ardently in liberty and opportunity, in equal rights and equal justice, I believe sincerely in home rule for Ireland.

If I were an Englishman I would believe with even greater earnestness in home rule not only for Ireland, but for every individual integral part of the British Empire.

I would believe in genuine home rule and in general home rule. I would believe in home rule which would insure complete independence in local government for every State and in a general government which would afford every State equal rights, equal liberty and proportionate representation.

Such just and genuine home rule is the best and perhaps the only remedy for the threatened decadence and possible dissolution of the British Empire. The preservation and perpetuation of the British Empire in its full prestige and power are only to be found in a voluntary federation of independent States, not held together loosely by compulsion, but molded into an imperial entity by the natural and the national living forces of mutual confidence and interest.

If I were an Irishman I would take pride in this fight for home rule, first because of the benefit I was helping to confer upon my country and my own countrymen, and, secondly, because of the benefit which will inevitably ensue to all other sections of the British Empire and to other nations throughout the world.

(Signed) WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

Irish Societies Laud W. R. Hearst's Fight for Erin's Liberty.

Chicago, Aug. 16, 1913.

Hon. William Randolph Hearst,

San Francisco:

The sentiment of the United Irish Societies toward your Chicago papers, the Examiner and the American, has always been one of appreciation. Often in the past we have admired your unselfish advocacy of the cause of liberty, and the 15,000 Irish-Americans at the ceremonies of unveiling the John F. Finerty monument were thrilled by your message in favor of home rule for Ireland.

This monument is symbolic of the revitalized Irish nation that has been the inspiration of Parnell, Redmond and other patriots, and we believe it would strengthen the home rule cause immeasurably if you would publish in the Chicago Sunday Examiner, in the near future, a comprehensive account of our recent demonstration here, and emphasize its significance to Irish liberty.

(Signed) JAMES T. CLARKE,
President United Irish Societies.

Dr. MacArthur Scores 'Bishop of New York'

No Christian Unity While Dr. Greer Assumes Title, He Says.

Rev. Robert S. MacArthur, D. D., of New York, in speaking before the Boston ministers today in Chipman Hall scored Bishop David H. Greer for "calling himself the bishop of New York."

"There will be no christian unity as long as some Christians assume titles to themselves," declared Dr. MacArthur. "The idea of a man calling himself, as Bishop Greer does, the bishop of New York.

"No one man is bishop of New York. What right has he say to that, especially when he presides over one of the smallest denominations in the country. He struts his way through New York and wants people to regard him as the bishop of that see. There will be no Christian unity as long as the Episcopalians hope to change the name of that church to 'American Church.' If Phillips Brooks were alive, with his broad spirit, he would set some of these modern Episcopalians right."

Joseph M. Caldwell, the former Hopedale strike leader, is out on parole pending his trial for complicity in "assault with attempt to murder" Officer Harrand during the recent labor troubles at Milford.

Caldwell was serving a three months' sentence in Worcester County Jail as a "dangerous person." On request of his attorney, Judge Lewis A. Auto News

By J. C. KERRISON.

That tax-free ethyl alcohol, manufactured under the United States government laws—known commercially as denatured alcohol, was the most natural material for the removal of carbon and the cleaning of gasoline engines, was demonstrated in a lecture by Professor A. Anglada of New York, in the convention Hall at Kansas City, before those in attendance at the National Gas Power show. Professor Anglada is chairman of the Metropolitan section of the Society of Automobile Engineers and an expert in the manufacture and operation of gas engines.

He treated the subject of denatured alcohol as a natural gasoline carbon cleanser of all types of gasoline engines, and his talk was of especial interest, owing to the fact that his views were the result of painstaking experiments extending over a period of twelve months.

TODAYS STOCK MARKET

By W. H. ROSS, Financial Editor.

Stock markets had more strength than activity at the start. The tone was firmer, partly because of foreign influence. The price was narrow during the morning but the tendency was upward both in this city and in New York.

New Haven advanced half a point here during the first hour, but later declined ⅝ from Saturday's close, selling at 99¾, a new low record. Quincy was up a point. Among mines to advance fractionally were Butte & Superior and Granby.

Share transactions in New York during the first hour totalled less than 70,000. Chesapeake & Ohio, Canadian Pacific, Union Pacific, Reading, American Can, Steel and Amalgamated were all fractionally higher, but several of them had receded from their highs of the morning. American Locomotive was especially strong, being up 1¾.

New York Market Opened Strong.

The New York market opened strong at the start, but gains were fractional as regards leaders. Firmness was imparted by a rise in Americans in London, where a more hopeful view is taken of the Mexican situation. After half an hour or so the issues included Amalgamated ⅝, Steel common ⅜, Union Pacific ¼, Southern Pacific ¼, Reading ⅛, Atchison ⅛, C. & O. ⅝, American Locomotive ⅜, and American Can ¼. B. R. T. shaded, and New Haven was off ¼.

The Curb was firm.

In London there was much covering in Canadian Pacific.

Will Soon Pass Tariff Bill.

Senator Simmons, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, says the tariff bill will become law by September 16. He expects the Senate to pass it within two weeks and the conference committee to be through with it by another. After that it has only to be signed by President Wilson. It could have been law before this but for senatorial oratory. Republicans had no hope of defeating the measure, or even of appreciably amending it, but they have spent several weeks in making speeches for political capital and to place themselves on record against it.

From time to time stories have come from Washington that the measure might be jeopardized by democratic disaffection, as some Senators of the dominant party are as much opposed to some of its provisions as any Republican. But not one of them has been able to block revision in any important detail.

Bankers to Have a Hearing.

There appears to be as little chance of banking interests getting the Currency bill materially altered as there was for protected manufacturers to stop Congress from radically cutting duties. But the bankers who have discovered the defects at Chicago will be given a hearing by Senators after the bill has been enacted into law. It is foldering that Democrats in the Senate will make many of the changes in the bill which aroused Democratic ire both branches of Congress, with few exceptions, are against giving banking interests any part in the control of Federal Board of Control, and sentiment against creating a currency to be issued by banks instead of the government is equally strong.

Changes in the measure by the Senate are uncertain. "I see a great deal of merit in the proposal to reduce somewhat the quantity of the reserves," said Senator Owen. "We have not discussed the new legislation sufficiently to formulate, however, to know what changes will be made in the bill."

Proposes to Save Millions.

Senator Shafroth of Colorado proposes to offer a measure which he thinks will save the government millions of dollars and be a substitute for the Glass-Owen proposition to refund two per cent. bonds into three per cents. His proposition is that as gold certificates are received into the Treasury they shall be cancelled and that gold they represent transferred to the redemption fund of the Treasury. Full legal tender United States notes redeemable in gold are to be issued in their place.

At the same time a like amount of United States notes for substitution of national bank notes and for the cancellation of the bonds securing these national bank notes upon the request of national banks may be issued and put into circulation in lieu of the national bank currency received in the Treasury.

"This bill," he says, "would save $12,246,438 a year now paid by the government as interest to maintain the bank currency.

It would save $22,246,438 a year from what it would cost the government after the substitution of the 2 per cent. bonds for the outstanding 2 per cents. to maintain the national bank notes. It would like the control of currency out of the hands of the banks and place it in the hands of the government. It would relieve the bankers, because it would cash their 2 per cent. bonds without loss to them."

Stock Markets Are "Professional."

European stock markets are as "professional" as those in this country, according to reports, and nowhere is the public participating in speculation to any extent. In Europe for months, or since the beginning of the Balkan war, Europeans have been holding tight to cash, and the recent improvement in the monetary situation there has had only a slight effect upon investing. Speculative sentiment is as quiescent as ever.

Regarding Paris it is said: "Brokers were content to execute vanity orders for clients, while the professionals awaited the return to the field of the big financial interests and the final settlement of the Near Eastern and Mexican questions."

About the London situation, it is added that the public is taking no risks. "Brokers," it is stated, "received inquires, but few orders."

Stock trading in Berlin is in the hands of professionals. It is reported by the financial correspondent of Hearst newspapers at the German capital.

"The public is neither buying nor selling," he states, "but is waiting to see what the outcome of financial and economic conditions will be."

Financial News in Brief.

The London copper warrants opened firm, spot and futures being up 8s. 9d. each.

The balance sheet of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the fiscal year ending with June shows a surplus of $77,597,000 against $72,885,960 for the previous year.

Milton Ice Company Raises Price of Ice

Shortage in Supply Is Blamed for Five Cents Increase.

The Milton Ice Company has raised the price of ice five cents a hundred pounds. The company declares that the supply of ice when they had at the beginning of the season gave out owing to extra heavy consumption, and the company was obliged to go into the open market to buy ice.

Smithers Explains Grand Trunk Plans

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 23.—A. W. Smithers of London, chairman of the Grand Trunk railway directors, leaving her today for his annual inspection of the Grand Trunk, said the road would not divert wheat traffic to New England ports via Cochrane, but would try to retain the good will of the Canadian people.

The circulation of the AMERICAN is 300,000 more than its next highest competitor. 100,000 more than all the other evening papers of Boston combined.

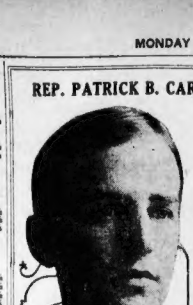
WESTERN UNION TELEGRAM
THEO. N. VAIL, PRESIDENT

Every Bell telephone is a Western Union Telegraph office.

Together they bring the world to your door.

THE WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY

REP. PATRICK B. CARR OF CHARLESTOWN



This is a Democratic Representative who ignored the people in the most important issue before the State. He voted to to pass the Western Trolley Merger Bill over the veto of Governor Foss. There never was a bill so universally condemned as this one, which gave the New Haven Railroad Trust control over more than half the street railways in Massachusetts. It was denounced by the Railroad Commission, the Tax Commissioner, the Chamber of Commerce, the Real Estate Exchange and the Interstate Commerce Commission. About it the Public Franchise League had said:

"IF THE PEOPLE OF MASSACHUSETTS WANT A COMPLETE PRIVATE MONOPOLY OF ALL THEIR MEANS OF TRANSPORTATION AND WANT THEIR RAILROAD LINES LOADED WITH THE BURDEN OF SECURING SUCH A MONOPOLY AT ANY PRICE, THEY SHOULD BY ALL MEANS FAVOR A MEASURE LIKE THIS WESTERN TROLLEY BILL."

In voting for this bill Mr. Carr paid the price of betraying his own party platforms which said: "WE ARE OPPOSED TO THE OWNERSHIP OR CONTROL OF OUR STREET RAILWAYS BY THE STEAM RAILROADS, AND BELIEVE THAT IT SHOULD GO NO FARTHER IN THIS COMMONWEALTH."

If you believe that this Representative should be placed where he can do you no injury by serving his own interests kindly send us your name and address. We will not publish it.

'One Chicken,' Quoth the Innocent Waiter

Whereupon Passerby in Shadow Gown Got Mad as a Wet Hen.

NEW YORK, Aug. 25.—"One chicken," cried William Roland, waiter in an open front Broadway dairy lunch, indicating a customer desired one chicken sandwich. A young woman in a pink shadow gown was passing and the customer laughed.

"Who are you calling a chicken?" she cried, striking Roland with her parasol "I'll show you what kind of a chicken I am—I'm a game chicken and I don't let any man like you insult me."

A crowd gathered and a policeman employed much diplomacy. The girl accepted the explanation, but when she left, she was as mad as a wet hen.

Miss Lorraine Has Sea-Going Watch

NEW YORK, Aug. 25.—Lillian Lorraine, a watch fastened to her ankle by a gold circlet and in a bathing costume that even a chorus girl in the "Follies" would have called saucy, disdained any chances for a quiet Sunday at Long Beach. Miss Lorraine declared the watch waterproof and went in bathing.

LARGEST CIRCULATION IN NEW ENGLAND, DAILY AND SUNDAY

Mr. James Lane Allen Has Told Us We Don't Make the Most of Our Parks and Has Pointed the Way to Do So—Mrs. Filene Has Set One Good Example

The outing in Franklin Park which Mrs. A. Lincoln Filene has given to several hundred children of the North End offers a two-fold benefit.

It gave the children who directly enjoyed Mrs. Filene's generosity the benefit of pleasure and the health-giving properties of nature in beautiful Franklin Park. It will also serve to initiate that class of our citizens who most need the benefits of our park system into the best way of enjoying the public parks.

The AMERICAN has been so much impressed with the failure of our people to utilize the beautiful park system which graces our city and Metropolitan district that we asked Mr. James Lane Allen, the distinguished novelist and devotee of outdoor life and of nature, to give us his impressions of our parks and of the use to which they were put by our citizens while he was visiting Boston recently.

Mr. Allen himself observed the infrequent use of the parks as places of real enjoyment. He found them to be rather promenades where stiff-necked propriety and discomforting dress parade seemed to be the fashion. He called attention to the very different use which the people of Europe make of their parks. He believed that the real utility of a park should be as a place in which people might go to spend the day, idling about on the grass, eating their food in picnics in the open air and getting the exercise and the sun and the abandon which is so relaxing to those incarcerated in a congested city district. He said:

> I think that the public would be attracted to the Boston parks if they found there restaurants and music.
>
> Berlin is now the greatest open-air dining place in Europe. If the parks of Berlin were used only for driving or riding they would be as comparatively empty as Boston parks.
>
> But the Boston parks are dinnerless deserts. Why should the holiday seekers go to such places.
>
> The continental Sunday will perhaps be the only way of bringing the Boston people and the Boston parks together, and this also applies to most other American cities.

The AMERICAN suggests that it would be well for the charitable organizations and also for the city itself to begin to instruct our people in the way to get the most benefit from our park system. Take the children out to the parks and let them spend the day there and take their fathers and mothers with them.

France Always the Friend—England Usually the Enemy—of This Country and Its Progress

However, Americans Feel Quite Cheerful About It. Certain Kinds of Dislike Are a Pleasing Tribute to Success

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

France, a nation of thinking men, a people that has taught other nations for centuries, is friendly to the United States, and will share in the great exposition OF CIVILIZATION in California.

England, hostile to the United States, irritated because the United States presumes to control its own canal, is not friendly to American progress and refuses to share in the Panama Exposition.

This does not irritate the people of the United States. It interests them and amuses them.

The situation now in 1913 is about as it was in 1776.

Then, as now, the French people and her ablest men sympathized with the Americans and shared in their fighting.

Then, as now, England disliked the suggestion that this country should manage its own affairs.

In those days, when we announced our intention to govern ourselves, the English, badly advised, decided to fight us.

With help and sympathy from France, we did what was necessary, and England's authority moved up to Canada and across the ocean.

Today again the United States declares its intention to manage its own affairs, and specifically the Panama Canal, built with our money, through territory which belongs to us.

England doesn't like the idea of our managing our canal in 1913 any more than she liked the idea of our managing our government in 1776.

But she is wiser now than in those ancient days.

Instead of sending over ships and gentlemen with red coats, TO MAKE US BEHAVE AND TAKE HER VIEWS, she sulks like a nice little Eton boy and will have nothing to do with us, and, above all, won't exhibit in California.

The attitude of England is childish and undignified. But for some time to come probably no other attitude can be expected.

This country is amused and instructed; it is not annoyed by the English refusal to share in the exposition.

Indifferent to the attitude of England, based on the childish notion that she ought to be able to do in 1913 what she couldn't do in 1776, this country is delighted with the friendly attitude of France that has lasted through so many years.

To have the friendship and sympathy of the French nation this country may well be proud.

A very great people are the French, genuine democrats, MEN ABLE TO GOVERN THEMSELVES IN THE REAL SENSE OF THE WORD, thinking men, and teachers of other men.

The French people for centuries have taught the rest of the world to think and to act.

Our statesmen in 1776 re-echoed the sentiments that the French leaders had been uttering since the days of Louis the Fourteenth.

Our Declaration of Independence, our Constitution and our rebellion against England were really the fruition of French thinking and French teaching, part of the work of the French encyclopedists, grafted upon the mixed race on this North American continent.

Today, as of yore, the French are leaders and teachers, and today, as in the days of 1776, the American people are proud to have the French as friends and sympathizers.

They will be welcome indeed at the great exposition which will celebrate the opening of the canal, the close union of the east and west coasts of the United States, and which will emphasize in 1913 the determination which we expressed in 1776 TO MANAGE THIS COUNTRY IN OUR OWN WAY.

THE HOBBLE

By PERCY SHAW

ACCORDING to the scientists
Of subtlest erudition
Who read on caves and obelisks
The tales of man's ambition,
The Neolithic hobble was
A well known manumission.

In those coy days it must have pleased
The sterner sex immensely
To watch the lovely damsels flee
From rock to boulder tensely
The while a Pterodactyl chased
Malicious and prepensely.

Although the hobble still holds sway,
Diaphanous, impressing,
No Pterodactyls haunt the air
With antics prepossessing—
Which shows while woman marches on
Mere man is retrogressing.

WOULD BUY THE RIVADAVIA

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—At last there is one red-blooded, patriotic American among the representatives of the people at Washington who can see a crisis ahead. The idea of Hon. Fred A. Britten of Illinois for three super-dreadnoughts, to be built as soon as possible, will meet the approval of all patriotic Americans, including the Hon. J. Daniels, Secretary of the Navy. But as it takes from two to three years to build a battleship, why not persuade Argentina to sell the battleship Rivadavia to the United States and likewise all other foreign ships being built in this country, thus increasing our navy by two or three first-class battleships in a few months' time, instead of two or three years, and making us ready for any crisis that may appear.

Unfit Mothers—Poverty Does Not Make Them So, as Many Are Rich. Criticism Committees Should Be Established Everywhere

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by the Star Company.

"THE unfitness of mothers of dependent children, complained of by 'organized charity,' is in my opinion all caused by poverty.

"The Mothers' Pension law recently enacted by the legislatures of eighteen States, will, to a great extent, make the unfit mother fit because the pension removes the cause of her unfitness, which is her poverty.

"It is the common observation that the very fine and very fit mother becomes comparatively unfit to take care of her children after a few years of hopeless struggle with poverty.

"The mistake of organized charity is their allowing good mothers of dependent children to be made unfit by the poison of poverty, the poison of hopelessness, the poison of overwork in trying to earn the living for their children at hard work and give proper care to their children at the same time.

"Organized charity contends that a mother should have her children taken away from her because poverty has made her temporarily unfit.

"The real friends of the poor, the advocates of mothers' pensions, believe that the mother should have the cause of her unfitness removed and not her children.

HENRY NEIL."

Unfit Mothers Caused by Poverty Open to Doubt

Mothers' pensions now extend from coast to coast. One can now travel from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean going through mothers' pension States only, starting on the coast of New Jersey and going through Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Utah, Nevada to the coast of California.

Other mothers' pension States are Washington, Oregon, Idaho, South Dakota, Minnesota, Massachusetts, New Hampshire—eighteen in all.

Three cities that have local mothers' pension laws are Kansas City, St. Louis and Milwaukee.

Meantime the statement of Mr. Neil that the unfit mothers are caused by poverty is open to doubt.

Some of the most unfit mothers to be found on earth are women of wealth.

Two little girls on board a large ocean liner were the daughters of a New York banker, and their mother was an educated woman, and their father was a man of parts; yet there were never seen on earth more insufferably disagreeable children than these. They were ill-mannered, impertinent, unkind and ungracious. The chief steward in the dining saloon was obliged to rebuke them for their impertinence and their annoying treatment of other passengers.

The children she had should have been taken away from such parents and placed under wise and worthy instructors.

A woman who has been reared with excellent opportunities for culture is the mother of four children. There is no financial strain upon the family, yet the children have never been taught any of the gracious and lovely traits which help to build a worthy character and a pleasing personality.

Every School and Church Should Have a Criticism Committee

Loud, harsh voices, flat contradictions, continual quarreling and the most disagreeable qualities distinguish this family.

Such parents are certainly unfit to bring up families.

A fund for the erection of a large scientific institution, such as Dr. Elmer Gates has always longed to see established, would be a benefit to the world, an institution where the brain cells of vulgar and disorderly children, as well as the perverted and viciously inclined, could be developed into constructive qualities.

Every school and church in the land ought to have a "Criticism Committee," such as existed in the Oneida Community years ago.

To this committee every person who had a complaint to make of the manners or conduct of another member of the community went, and the committee called the offending person with the complainant, and the whole subject was calmly and thoroughly investigated. And reproof was administered where it belonged, and if it were proven that any personal or selfish or jealous feelings prompted the complainant, he was placed under ban, and made to see how unworthy was his action.

An Institution for Brain Building Would Also Be Good.

Unselfishness was the religious keynote of the society, and had it let sex problem alone it would have been one of the greatest factors for bettering the world which ever existed in America.

If our schools and colleges and churches could adopt this excellent idea of the Oneida Community and establish the "Criticism Committee" and then carry Dr. Elmer Gates' dream of a brain-building institution into realization, the children of the idle rich might stand as good a chance of becoming agreeable and useful citizens as do the children of the poor today.

MY SISTER OF THE FACTORY

By LILIAN LAUFERTY

I'M far away in woodlands green,
While she is shackled down
With chains and gyves and links afire
That bind her to the town.
With rust and lust of customs old
The treadmill of the town
Still holds my little sister fast,
Pale-cheeked while I am brown.

I breathe the open spaces vast,
Fill full my lungs with air,
Nor care that she may come at last
To walk with gaunt despair.
I talk of knowing your own place,
I say God called us there,
I prate of sisters all—but she Knows well I do not care.

She toils through long gold Summer days,
Where wheels of commerce turn
Her youth into a golden stream
My Summer joys to earn.
So in the whirling factory,
Pale-cheeked while I am brown,
Her pain buys joy & life for me—
I bind her to the town.
